STEELE ANSWERS SIMS AT LITHONIA

Lithonia, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)—Indicating that his remarks were intended as a reply to references made to him here last Saturday by Mayor Sims, Leslie J. Steele, candidate for congress from the fifth district, addressed an audience of Lithonia citizens here this afternoon.

Congressman Upshaw, Mr. Steele said, "has no following except in Fulton county," and the present congressman received scant mention today from Steele.

In part, Mr. Steele said: "Now, as to Mr. Sims, I would not discuss him at all, if I did not deem it necessary to warn the people against the reckless, untruthful and unfounded statements he is making in this race. The public ought to know not to believe anything he says unless he produces proof of his charges. I have already successfully answered several of his false charges against me, and there are two others which he made in his speech at Lithonia last Saturday which I wish now to answer."

"For instance, he charged that I, while a member of the legislature, voted against the semi-monthly bill. He made this statement willfully, made it for the purpose of misleading the labor men of this section of the country, made it to deceive them and to get them to vote for him and against me, and he was willing to, and did, sacrifice his veracity for the labor vote."

"In 1916, while I was a member of the legislature, there was a bill before the house, introduced by Walter Andrews, of Fulton county, providing for the payment of wages to laborers semi-monthly. I voted for this bill, as shown by the journal of the house of 1916, page 978."

"Again, in 1917, the same bill was introduced in the senate by Senator Andrews, of the thirty-fifth, and by Senator Elders, of the second district. I voted for this bill, as shown by the journal of 1917, page 1172, it being in the session of 1918 before the bill reached the house for action."

"Mr. Sims charged me with voting for a bill that would forever prevent the laborer going on a strike. No such bill was before the legislature while I was a member. The nearest thing to it was a bill known as an anti-picketing bill, which arose out of the strike of the employees on the A. B. & A. railroad. This bill never reached the floor of the house and there was no record vote on it."

"When the bill came up before the committee I voted against the motion to return the bill to the house with the recommendation that it do pass. There is not any record of this vote. I can prove this vote, however, by my two colleagues from DeKalb county, who were members of the committee. This bill was before the committee on July 24, 1922."

"There has come to my knowledge the most astounding proposition I ever heard of in a political campaign. I am advised, and am in position to prove that Mr. Sims invited a Rockdale county citizen to come to his office and in response to this request this Rockdale citizen went. Mr. Sims proposed to hire him at a salary of $25 per week to work for him, and he also wanted to engage other men to work for him at the same price. The work to be done was to get signatures to a letter of which the following is a copy:

Mr. L. J. Steele,
Decatur, Ga.

Dear Sir: We, the undersigned citizens of Rockdale county, hereby petition you to retire from the race for congress, because we do not believe you have any chance of winning and that if you remain in the race you will be a help to Congressman Upshaw, and we believe that the best interest of the district will be served by defeating him.

Respectfully,
"Mr. Sims informed this man from Rockdale county that he expected to have this petition circulated in the other counties of the district. There is no use for me to enlarge upon the purpose of this letter. It is self-explanatory."

COTTON EXPORTS FROM NORFOLK HAS INCREASE

Norfolk, Va., July 31.—(AP)—More cotton was exported directly from Hampton Roads during the fiscal year ending today than during any other corresponding period in the port's history. Charles C. Grant, secretary of the Norfolk and Portsmouth Cotton Exchange, announced today.

Altogether, Mr. Grant explained, the year's business was the best in the past eight years and indications are now, as the new fiscal year begins, that Hampton Roads will continue to handle a heavy tonnage in 1927.

A total of 311,083 bales were shipped from here direct to foreign destinations during the past 12 months, an increase of 58,859 bales over the fiscal year of 1925. The export movement was valued at $30,767,808 and moved in 183 steamers.

The distribution was as follows: Liverpool, 84,808 bales; Manchester, 55,595 bales; France, 100 bales; Germany, 131,335 bales; Holland, 6,462 bales; Belgium, 4,044 bales; Italy, 3,849 bales; Denmark, 3,180 bales; Japan, 16,000 bales, and China, 4,350 bales.

PASSAIC TEXTILE STRIKERS TO JOIN LABOR FEDERATION

Passaic, N. J., July 31.—Eight thousand striking textile mill workers at a mass meeting here tonight voted to join the American Federation of Labor.

It is believed that the strikers' vote was induced by the hope of securing participation of the federation in their fight against the operators.

Tonight's meeting followed efforts of civic authorities to oust Albert Weissbord, young law school graduate, as leader of the strike. Mayor McGuire, of Passaic, today said that the strikers "had been fooled by Weissbord."

Asked how the opera season could be lengthened, the singer replied: "Why do you want the season lengthened? It is long enough now. Too long, I should say. Why bother the poor people with so much opera? Americans are not opera loving. They like musical comedies, and I don't blame them."

"I would rather go to a musical comedy than to an opera. I like the society of the light shows. It is so much fun. Americans attend symphony concerts, for which I admire them. Symphonies are art. It is just a billboard with a lot of colors. It is just a show. It is just a show with a little more aristocracy about it."

During this entire period, many of these radical innovations have flared up only to flicker out. But one revolutionary principle has survived as fundamental, is now eloquently endorsed, and is dominating the interest of the world's greatest automotive engineers.

That feature is air-cooling.

Franklin developed and perfected it. It is exclusive with the Franklin Car. And, today, 23 years after the Wright brothers flew for the first time, aviation—the most modern industry—has followed Franklin's lead and adopted air-cooling.

See What the Government Has Done

Today, the air-cooled motor is the recognized standard for U. S. Navy planes. It is rapidly becoming standard for commercial planes as well. Already, six out of the ten government air-mail lines have chosen air-cooled planes.

There isn't a single logical reason why every motor car should not be air-cooled. There isn't a car, of any make, that would not be greatly improved by this feature.

In a new way, airplanes are showing how air-cooling increases power efficiency, augments reliability, widens the margin of safety.

W. B. Stout, the eminent aviation expert, recently prophesied what Franklin long ago prophesied: that all motor cars must come to air-cooling.

Byrd and Cobham Used Air-Cooling

In the air, not alone efficiency and comfort, but life itself is at stake. Aviation simply had to come to air-cooling.

Ask Cobham, fresh from his conquest of burning African deserts. Ask Byrd, with his remarkable North Pole flight still on every one's lips. It was a question not merely of selecting planes that would fly, but of choosing ones that would keep on flying. They know that without air-cooling their deeds would scarcely have been possible.

The Broad Influence of Air-Cooling Is Amazing

Air-cooling is the magic solvent of automobile drawbacks. It eliminates cooling trouble. That is why Henry Ford said, "We'll use air, instead of water, for cooling planes."

UPSHAW SPEAKS AT DOUGLASVILLE

Douglasville, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)—In spite of a downpour of rain which continued most of the day, Congressman W. D. Upshaw addressed a large crowd here today. He was formerly a citizen of Douglas county. His speech was well received.

He was introduced by Rev. J. E. Lowry, pastor of the Douglasville Baptist church, and speeches were made in the candidate's behalf by Rev. Luke Rader, pastor of the Central Baptist church, of Atlanta, and Horace Russell, councilman in Atlanta.

In answering charges made by his opponents that he had done nothing in congress, Mr. Upshaw produced copies of several bills he had introduced and the fight he had made to get them passed by a republican administration.

Mr. Upshaw stated that during his term in congress he had introduced 95 bills, 62 public and 33 private, and that nine of the private bills had passed. One private bill, he stated, had passed the house and is now pending in the senate.

"Both of my opponents," Mr. Upshaw said, "have repeatedly declared that 'Upshaw has done nothing.' And Mr. Sims actually made the baseless and foolish declaration on this very spot, two weeks ago that 'Upshaw has eight more eggs to his credit,' for the eight years he has been in congress. There was nothing about that statement but campaign hot air. I propose here and now to prove the utter untruthfulness of his charge. I ask every man and woman present who has ever written to me or come to me for services and failed to get that service promptly and efficiently to stand in this presence and lift your hand. If one should rise to bear this adverse testimony it would be the first such response I have ever seen passed against me in any audience I have addressed in the district. In other words, every audience to whom I have put that question has given me 100 per cent endorsement, and if you vote me 100 per cent endorsement and efficiency now you ought to cast the same 100 per cent endorsement on election day."

Answering the charge that he claimed credit for removing negro patients from base hospital No. 48 in Atlanta, Congressman Upshaw said there was no congressional action taken on that matter, but that the patients were removed within 30 days after the matter was called to his attention and after he became active in their removal.

Mr. Upshaw stated that he was responsible for the government building the Protestant chapel's home at the federal prison in Atlanta, and quoted Congressman Byrne, ranking democrat on the appropriations committee, as giving him credit for the erection of the home "as the result of Upshaw's personal standing with the committee on appropriations."

The congressman stated that in 1921 he introduced a bill proposing a fund of "$300,000,000 to relieve farmers from the disastrous deflation growing out of the abnormal war conditions," but said the bill got no further than "republican committee."

Mr. Upshaw read excerpts from a bill he said he introduced in 1922, which provided "an amendment to the federal farm loan act so that branch banks shall be established in the capital of each state." He said that bill, which met with the favor of the agricultural leaders, died in the committee room.

In taking up the "foreign entanglements" case the congressman stated he had opposed any kind of foreign entanglements for the United States that "called for the surrender of one inch or atom of American sovereignty" and that he still maintained that position. He said the world court issue is "irrelevant" in this race.

The congressman stated his name is "William D. Upshaw, and when Mr. Sims uses the term 'Weary Willie' he employs the epithet of a guttering or common tramp and he insults the people of this district by charging that they have four times elected such a person to represent them in the national congress."

"I am willing for my life to be measured in comparison, both in its private and public functions, with that of each of my opponents, and I am willing to stand or fall by the verdict of the people who have known me for more than 50 years," Mr. Upshaw concluded.

St. Petersburg, Fla., July 31.—(AP)—Florida's democratic convention, first state-wide gathering in 26 years, will be held here in October if the movement launched tonight by the St. Petersburg Democratic club is successful.

The club appointed a committee of four to confer with county and state executive committees as well as with political leaders throughout the state, with a view of bringing the party together as one unit. At the last state executive committee as well as endorsed W. J. Bryan on his second nomination for the presidency and went on record as upholding the principle of 16 to 1.

Why Franklin Holds So Many Road Records

Along with the uninterrupted power of the air-cooled motor goes scientific light, unspurred weight and nicety of balance. That is why the New Franklin is the finest road car. It rarely has to slow up. And no other car can run all day, throttle wide open, without loss of power.

Air-cooling eliminates nearly 200 parts necessary in the water-cooled car, with their attendant liabilities.

That is one reason why the New Franklin is the most economical car—why it was easily first in its class in the famous Yosemite Economy Run. In tire and fuel savings, it is equally incomparable.

Only Franklin Could Do This

On July 1st, 185 stock Franklin Cars, operating in 185 different parts of the country, impressively revealed the greater reliability that goes with owning an air-cooled car. The dealers announced in advance that they would drive 100 miles, all the way in low gear—and actually did so without overheating their engines to the slightest degree.

Only the Franklin Car could have done this, because only the Franklin is air-cooled.

What Is the Sign When You Pour Water or Anti-Freeze Mixtures?

It means more than the loss of a little time, or a small visible expense. It's your cue to swing over from unreliability and needless bother to the trouble-free reliability that sound fundamentals assure. Substitutes for fundamentals soon reveal their weaknesses, and you pay for them.

Motorists are tiring of these old ways, and are keener on the scent of the new. And the genuine new means air-cooling and the Franklin Car. Is it not significant that 50 per cent more Franklins have been sold to owners of water-cooled cars so far during 1926 than in the same period of 1925? That year, you remember, was the most prosperous in Franklin history.

If you like a car built close to the ground, get a Franklin. If you demand exceptional dignity, grace of contour, harmony of line and charm of color, come and see what the celebrated de Causse has done with the exceptional materials and principles that Franklin engineers have placed at his disposal.

TALMADGE URGES MANY DEBATES

Tifton, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)—Signifying his willingness to participate in any joint debates, Eugene Talmadge, candidate for commissioner of agriculture of Georgia, in a speech here today called upon J. J. Brown, the incumbent and candidate for reelection, to "name dates in every congressional district for joint debates between us."

"The people are interested in this matter, let's accommodate them," said Mr. Talmadge.

In his speech here Mr. Talmadge, in part said:

"Mr. Brown saw fit to challenge me to join debate. He suggested McRae, my home town, as the first place, and also suggested Elberton, and suggested that these debates be extended to other points over the state. I unconditionally accepted Mr. Brown's challenge."

"Just a word of good cheer to the people over the state that are really interested in defeating the Brown machine. You know there is something in the good book that carries this meaning. 'Make your enemies serve you.' Mr. Brown by his challenge to me did what a great many thoughtful people of the state are really interested in. He eliminated the other candidates in this race. By Mr. Brown's challenge to me, he told the people of Georgia that the commissioner's race is between Talmadge and Brown."

The debate at McRae, Ga., will be held Tuesday, August 3, at 11 a. m. The time was set to allow this debate, I advise you to get your lunch before the debate begins. Mr. Pico, mayor of Dawson, invited Mr. Brown and me to meet at Dawson Wednesday, August 4, at 8 p. m. As soon as I learned that Mr. Brown's campaign manager had accepted for Mr. Brown, I accepted the invitation. I will be there.

TWO SUSPECTS HELD IN DONALDSON KILLING

W. B. Sands, of Macon, spent full days studying the lay of the land at the hotel and carefully checked every detail of the murder plot and the subsequent "let-ava" before he lured Donaldson Thursday night and lured him into coming to the hotel room on some mission unknown to him.

Northern Gunmen Sought.
Solicitor Boykin Saturday was pressing the hunt for the slayers—known to have been gunmen from Chicago or some eastern city imported by local crime interests to remove a prosecutor who "knew too much." He was assisted during the morning and afternoon by his investigators and assistants and declined to discuss the case in detail with newspapermen.

Everything that can be done is being done," he asserted. "We have a number of clues and each is being added to its very bottom. What these clues are I cannot tell you. The solicitor, who Friday night announced offer of a personal reward of $10,000 for apprehension of the killers, said friends of Donaldson had increased it to $15,000, and added that he expected this amount to be increased to $5,000 in the near future.

Guest Heard Shots.
The inquest—which ended with the stentorian verdict that Donaldson "died of a gunshot wound"—also served to increase amazement at the boldness of the desperadoes, who deliberately selected one of the city's biggest and most fashionable hotels in which to kill a public prosecuting official with a shotgun.

How they muffled the sound; how they hoped that the terrific noise of the two discharges would not reach the ears of scores of people all about, remains a mystery, but the investigation conducted by Coroner Paul Donahoe at the J. Austin Dillon funeral parlors Saturday did develop definitely that one man heard the shots and made some move to investigate, however.

Belief that W. B. Sands, of Macon, who registered at the hotel Thursday night shortly after 8 o'clock for the room in which the investigation was conducted, was identical with a man who registered at the hotel Monday after dinner as J. H. Summers, of Detroit, was expressed at the inquest by Robert F. Easterling, hotel clerk.

Hotel Clerk Testifies.
Easterling testified that this man came to the hotel shortly after 8 o'clock Thursday night and registered. When he approached the desk a portfolio was seen in his hand by the clerk, who testified that he believed the man who called himself Sands had been at the hotel on previous occasions during the past week or 10 days.

"His face was familiar and I looked over the register to see if I could find his handwriting, believing that he registered under an assumed name or a different name when at the hotel before," Mr. Easterling declared. After he was asked concerning his baggage, according to Mr. Easterling, the man stated that his bags would be brought in in a few minutes. Sands was then allowed to go to his room. He was not seen by Easterling after he left the hotel desk en route to his room.

Asked for a detailed description of Sands, Easterling said that he appeared to weigh about 170 or 180 pounds, was about 5 feet 9 inches tall and wore a dark tweed suit. His complexion was light. In his left hand he held a brief case which appeared to be about 12 by 18 inches in dimensions. It is believed the shotgun was secreted in this case.

Mr. Easterling also testified that a traveling salesman by the name of Block had told him that he heard the shots and jumped up and looked out the window facing Peachtree street thinking that the shooting had occurred on the street. He saw nothing and after waiting a while to see if an ambulance came by, forgot the incident.

No One in Adjoining Rooms.
There were no persons assigned to the rooms adjoining that in which the shooting occurred, the clerk stated. Testimony from the clerk to the effect that another night clerk had seen a man sitting in a chair close to the wall on the terrace that night after Easterling had completed his work for the day, was also given. The suspicious person could not be described by the clerk.

Mrs. Mabel Steck, telephone operator at the fashionable hotel, gave practically the same testimony concerning Sands' registry as did Easterling. She was on duty behind the desk Thursday night when Sands applied for a room.

She testified that a man appearing to be in the thirties, who was rather slender, wearing a gray suit of clothes, came to the desk and asked for Mr. Sands. She stated that this was shortly after Sands registered. The man was not Donaldson, she said.

"After he went up to the room," she stated, "I thought I heard two shots, but I am not certain they were shots. It was a muffled noise."

Mrs. Steck testified that she had seen Sands on previous occasions and that she believed he had registered at the hotel on one occasion during the past week or ten days, but under a different name.

Miss Dorothy Albert, daughter of the hotel manager, told the jury that she was coming down on the elevator from the ninth floor and the elevator stopped at the third floor and two men got on. They said nothing while on the elevator and were strangers to her. She described the men as being "one a short, ugly looking man who was very stout and very red-faced, and the other a tall, nice looking man."

They were standing in the hall of the third floor about 8 o'clock when I came down. They had no baggage in their hands," she testified.

Della Sapp, negro maid, testified that she went to the hotel room about 10 o'clock Friday morning but found the door locked from the inside. She went back on two other occasions during the morning but could not gain entrance with her pass key.

The housekeeper, Mrs. Frances Macon, was then notified and also Miss Sapp, who was in the room at the time, but neither could answer the telephone. Lige Freeman, negro bell man registering for the room in which

Donaldson was killed under the name of W. B. Sands, of Macon, was undoubtedly the same man who had registered in the Georgian Terrace hotel last Monday and again Wednesday under different names, was heard by the coroner's jury.

On one of these occasions Sands registered under the name of J. B.

Summers, giving his address as Detroit. This testimony was given by the negro elevator boy, Rutherford Ben-ley, who said he had seen Sands in the hotel on previous occasions.

Furnishing the jury practically the same description of the man who went up and down the elevator with Donaldson on three different occasions the night of the murder, and also of the two mysterious men who got off the elevator on the fourth floor—one floor above where the murder was committed—Bentley described the two explosions which he heard and believed to be from a high-powered weapon, as did passenger Bentley who was carrying up on the elevator, Mrs.

Aurelian Coolidge, who has an apartment on the fifth floor and who was so frightened that she retired to her suite with reluctance.

caped from the hotel after the shooting, or how the two mysterious men

the hotel, neither Bentley nor any of the other witnesses were able to tell the jury.

In many respects, the description furnished of the men was so vivid that officers predicted they would have little difficulty in recognizing them if

The coroner's physician, Dr. Homer

Heid, testified that he probed the wounds in the body of Mr. Donaldson and found a wound about 2 inches in size in and just back of the left ear and another in the back to the left of the spinal cord. There was only one large opening in and back of the ear, while there were 12 distinct bullet holes in the back. Apparently the wounds were made from buckshot, he stated. Either of the wounds was sufficient to produce death, he added.

Recalls Mills Murder.

Saturday Solicitor Boykin pointed significantly to the similarity of the circumstances surrounding the murder of Ed Mills, bunco operator, who was slain by his chief, the notorious

in 1919, and the slaying of Bert

Donaldson.

The apparent murder plots in both instances were substantially the same, the solicitor said. The method of assassination, too, was almost identical, he pointed out. Donaldson, according to facts uncovered by Mr. Boykin, was lured from his home Thursday night

by a telephone call, which took him to the Georgian Terrace. Mills also was lured to a hotel room by a telephone call, the solicitor pointed out.

Mills was shot as he turned the knob to enter Woodward's room, while

Donaldson was shot after he walked into the room into a carefully laid murder plot by a slayer who ambushed himself in a clothes closet. These were the only differences in the two killings, Mr. Boykin said.

"We do not know yet what message was conveyed to Donaldson

Thursday night when he was called on the telephone at home," the solicitor said. "Nor was it known what message brought Mills to the Ansley hotel room. But we do realize that there is a startling similarity in the execution of the two slayings."

Woodward, who is under a murder indictment in connection with the slaying of Mills, denied that he plotted to kill and claimed that he shot in self-defense. He is a fugitive from justice now and it is believed Donaldson was hot on his trail before he met death at the hands of an as-

National Search Launched.

While the coroner's inquest was in progress, forces of Solicitor Boykin were launching a national search for the slayers. Photographic copies of the handwriting of the man who registered as W. B. Sands were made, and thousands of duplicates were placed in the mails to police departments of cities all over the country.

Mrs. Donaldson was questioned in order that the police might gain as much information as possible regarding the phone call that summoned

to the nerve and bravery of Bert Donaldson since his right hand man met death.

"He was one of the gamest men I ever knew," the solicitor said, "and he was killed brutally by men who hated him. There is no doubt that there are many criminals who would have given thousands of dollars to secure his death; and though Donaldson recognized the menace that constantly hung over him, he never faltered, but bravely carried on wherever his duty called."

"I am going to do everything in my power to bring these assassins to justice. The search already is under way, and it will be pressed to the bitter end."

Funeral services for Donaldson will be held this afternoon at 4 o'clock from Wesley Memorial church, with the Rev. Marvin Williams officiating. Interment will be in Casey cemetery, with J. Austin Dillon in charge. Pallbearers will be James Wells, Woods White, Gordon Hardy, Charles N. Walker, Solicitor Boykin and Assistant Solicitor Ed A. Stephens.

DONALDSON DEATH EVIDENCES POLICE NEED, SAYS JURIST

Declaring that the death of Bert Donaldson, special investigator for Solicitor General John A. Boykin, is the excessive price Atlanta has had to pay for the lesson that the city is insufficiently protected by police, Judge E. D. Thomas, of Fulton superior court, Saturday urged an immediate increase of the police force.

"In my opinion, this brutal murder was to eliminate this enemy of the Woodward bunco range and to avenge the arrest of Mark Tillery, in Vancouver, B. C., which Donaldson brought about during the last few weeks."

"Atlanta is an enterprising and wealthy community and one on which bunco men have cast envious eyes. They have wanted for years to reopen their operations here. They had one big hindrance and that was Bert Donaldson, who knew them and their methods thoroughly."

"With Donaldson's murder, the bunco men will swarm back to Atlanta. Now is the time to take every precaution against them. Atlanta has paid dearly with the life of one of its most valuable men for the lesson it has learned, but I believe it will profit by the fact this murder demonstrates," Judge Thomas concluded.

gypsy leader, Arthur Burckley, will play the jazz-loving son, and William McLeod will be the count. Francis Trier will play the king of Massilia, while Anne Yago and Mary Leila Patterson will have important roles.

In response to numerous requests that Louise Hunter be given an opportunity to display the range and variety of her voice in a number more worth-while than the light music of comic opera, she has consented to interpolate in the second act of "Sari" the great coloratura air, the "Polonaise" from "Mignon." It is an aria chosen by many famous coloratura sopranos, filled with difficult runs and cadenzas and making great demands upon the voice.

Besides this interpolated number, much beautiful music falls to Miss Hunter in the role of the gypsy girl. Her songs include "Pick a Husband," "Haza-zan," "Simple Little Village Maid" and the duet with Mr. McLeod, "Love's Own Sweet Song."

Children in Cast.

Louis Templeman has an impressive part as Pali, and an exceptionally fine song number, "Time O Time Thou Tyrant King." Lou Powers, principal comedy number, with the chorus is the song "Paris."

Mr. Morton, the stage director, has given special attention to the staging of "Sari" and several extra people, including a number of small children, have been engaged.

Seats will go on sale Thursday for the eighth and last production of the season, "The Merry Widow," with Louise Hunter as Sonia.

law left at 2 p. m., in Mrs. Bonner's car.

Mrs. Hall's $15,000 bail release came in time to permit her to discharge a somber duty—attend the funeral of Colonel J. J. Janeway, who will be buried Monday. Colonel Janeway was president of the wall paper manufacturing firm of Janeway and Carpenter. As a partner in the concern owned by Mrs. Hall's close relative, he was the principal benefactor of legal activity, and of some slight uncertainty in the renewal of the Hall-Mills murder investigation. The uncertainty is that of State Senator Alexander Simpson, who has received a tentative appointment from Governor Moore, of New Jersey, as a special state's attorney general to handle the prosecution.

NEW CLUE FOUND IN 'CHOIR MYSTERY'

Milwaukee, July 31.—(AP)—Mrs. Howard Harding, of Shorewood, a suburb of Milwaukee, today photographed Sheriff Joseph Hanlon, of Somerset county, New Jersey, telling him she had clues which may aid in unraveling the Hall-Mills murder mystery.

Mrs. Harding said she was traveling alone on a lonely road in New Jersey the night of September 14, 1932, by automobile. She was alone and had lost her way between Marlinton and New Brunswick. About 1:30 a. m. she was accosted by a man who came from a wooded section.

"Thinking him a holdup man, I offered him what money I had," Mrs. Harding said. "In return, he asked me what I had seen. I responded that I had seen nothing, and was warned: 'Let me tell you, if you repeat anything you have seen tonight, I'll get you.'" Mrs. Harding said she did not see a woman.

Regarding other incidents in connection which she saw, Mrs. Harding said she would not relate them to anyone other than Sheriff Hanlon. She was certain she saw three men standing near an automobile while the man was talking to her.

CHURCH CLOSINGS

otherwise regulating the Catholic church.

10,000,000 Barred From Churches.

More than 10,000,000 Mexican Catholics tonight are barred from their shrines. Most of the clashes reported occurred last night when final services were held in Catholic churches throughout the country. In addition to the 35 or 40 persons seriously injured, it is estimated that at least 50 persons received minor injuries.

Tonight government troops remained on guard over most of the churches. Five hundred soldiers were stationed at the famous Basilica of Guadalupe. Here and at other cathedrals the troops would not permit people to approach the church property, even accompanying them to their homes in some instances.

Many churches were opened shortly before noon today, but the people who entered them found the tabernacles containing the holy sacrament removed and no priests to hear their confessions or to discharge other holy offices.

Takes Inventories.

Troops will remain on guard at the churches, presumably, until the government has taken inventories of the treasures they contain. The national palace also is guarded. Everywhere there is evidence of a tensely which promises to grow greater as the climax approaches in this warfare which holds so many possibilities in the political and religious life of Mexico.

Scenes which were dramatic in their religious sentiment and in their potentialities for trouble accompanied the closing of the churches. Thousands of pilgrims had thronged to them for final services. As the closing hour approached many women swooned in the crush. Others of the faithful were conspicuous for their weeping and depression by the closing of the churches which for years had been so much a part of their lives.

The bishop of Michoacan telegraphed to the archbishop here asking permission to reopen the churches under church control, owing to the demands for entrance from the excited populace. The archbishop answered that orders already had been given and must be obeyed.

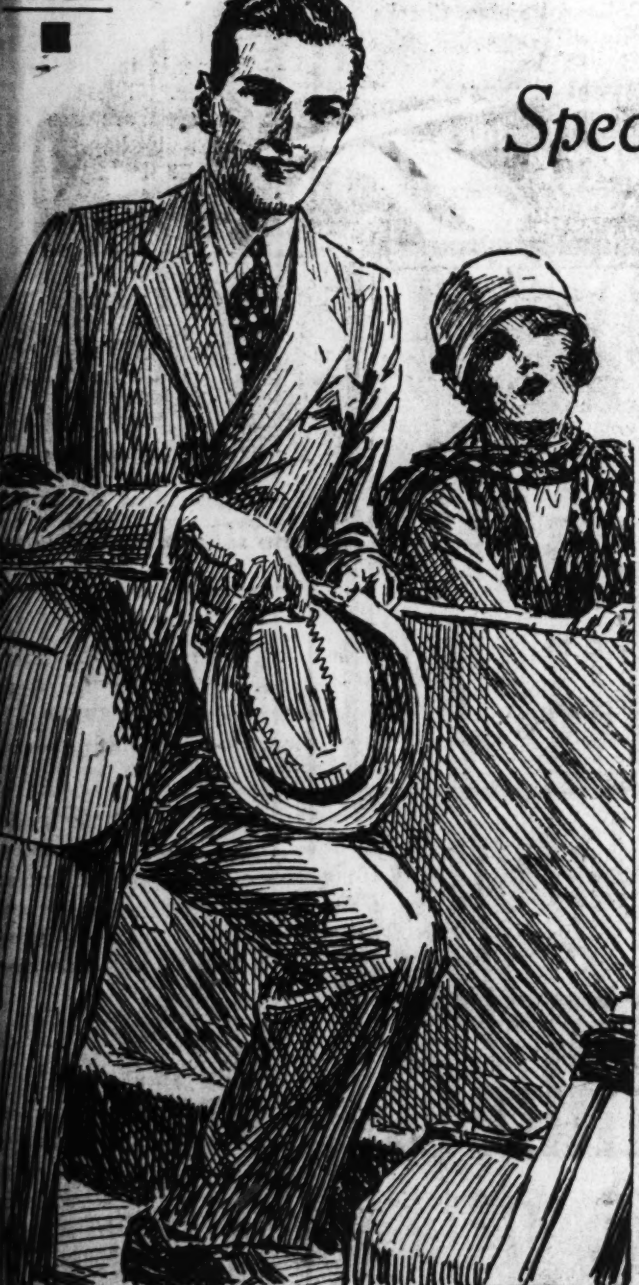

Riots Were Scattered.

Last night's riots were scattered. The first bloodshed is believed to have been caused at San Rafael, a suburb of Mexico City, where troops intervened and fired on the crowd which refused to leave the church. The Church of the Sacred Family, in the fashionable Colonia Roma section of Mexico City, was the scene of a slight disturbance when yendemes dispersed crowds in front of the church.

Thirty-five men and seven women were arrested after the rioting at San Rafael. The crowd fought police, firemen and soldiers who were sent to establish order, throwing stones and cutting the firemen's hose.

In all, five riots were reported.

Open Break Is Seen in Row Over Employing Architects To Draw Up School Plans Buildings Wait While School Board and Bond Commission Wangle Over Best Procedure.

Either a conciliation between the board of education and the bond commission on the question of employing architects to draw plans for school buildings provided in the $5,000,000 bond issue or a "show-down" will be made this week, it was indicated Saturday by Dr. R. M. Hubanks, president of the board of education.

At present the two bodies are cross-purposes, the board wishing to employ architects to draw plans and specifications on a percentage basis and the bond commission advocating an architectural bureau to be operated under the direction of the school administration department. Already two resolutions have been passed by each of the two bodies indicating their wishes, which have in turn been refused flatly by the other.

Efforts of the board of education and the bond commission to conciliate will be brought to a head Tuesday when a called meeting of the board has been called, to which all members of the bond commission are invited. Unless a satisfactory settlement can be effected at the meeting an open break between the two is openly predicted by many.

As the matter stands all work on schools is being held up and no progress can be made. Both the bond commission and the board have agreed on the expenditure of both bodies under the question of architectural plans can be settled the work will be at a standstill.

According to the plans of the bond commission an architectural department would be formed, with a high-class architect at the head, who would direct all outside work for buildings. It is claimed by members of the commission that a saving of enough to erect a standard grammar school would be effected. Under this plan all blueprints and specifications would be in the possession of the city for future use in the school department.

School Board Position.

The position of the school board is that no material saving could be effected by such a measure and that it is unfair to local architects to institute such a plan. It is said that the plan to have architects work on a commission basis has always proven satisfactory and that if the bond commission wishes to establish such a bureau that it would be profitable to establish one which would furnish plans for the new city hall as well.

Another point on which the two bodies disagree is the construction of the Stewart Avenue school. A standard school is to be erected here and plans and specifications have been ready for some time and the board has a "gentleman's agreement" with Ten Eyck Brown to plan the building. At the last meeting of the bond commission resolutions giving Mr. Brown authority to present his plans and specifications were passed with the proviso that the plans would become the property of the city and the school building would not cost more than a school of a similar type.

This provision was turned down by Mr. Brown, when presented to him by Dr. Hubanks. Mr. Brown stated that it would be impossible for him to give the plans to the city as it is against the rules of the American Institute of Architects. This situation also holds up the work of the Stewart Avenue school.

It is understood that no plans as to the expenditure of the second $1,000,000 of school funds will be made until a settlement is reached on the question of architects. It is pointed out that it would be needless to outline a program for the expenditures while group A is now awaiting a final settlement.

Attempt Termed Useless.

Objections to the proposal of the bond commission are being made by the Georgia chapter of the American Institute of Architects, according to Arthur Neal Robinson, president. In a statement given out Saturday by Mr. Robinson, he pointed out that an attempt to standardize plans for school buildings by establishment of an architectural department would be useless since it has failed in many instances. The statement also declared that little if any saving would be made by such a measure and that it would be unfair to local architects.

The complete statement by Mr. Robinson follows:

"The attitude of the bond commission in recommending the organization of an architectural department to design and supervise the school buildings under the present bond issue and the reported savings that the advocates of this system claim, as against the employment of competent local architects, has caused a situation that demands reformation in order that the profession shall receive proper consideration.

Methods Attacked in Detail.

"The salient points of the methods proposed are said to be, (1st) the standardization of the plans and specifications of the different classes of buildings so they can be used ad infinitum and thus save the expense of producing special material for each project or building. (2nd) The concentration of the entire necessary service under salaried heads. (3rd) That the ultimate saving over the usual method of employing private practitioners will be between $100,000.00 and $150,000.00, or an average of $125,000.00.

"Primarily, it has been tried again and again to standardize school plans with slight success caused by varying conditions, and especially in this district by varying topography. It is possible to standardize details such as the class room and its equipment, windows, doors, flooring, finishing material and mechanical work such as plumbing fixtures, electrical equipment, heating system and the like, which in the last analysis work by far the greatest economy in the mass or bulk of the material required for a systematic and efficient use of labor. The mere effort to endeavor to use the same layout, however, defeats its own end in lack of proper housing for different location requirements and topography.

"Secondarily, it can be easily demonstrated by the records of any properly conducted architectural office that the cost of producing plans, specifications, details, structural engineering plans and specifications and mechanical engineering plans and specifications covering plumbing, heating, ventilating and electrical work, together with administrative work, supervision of actual construction, cannot represent over two-thirds of the usual total fee of 6 per cent.

$4,000 Per Project.

"Therefore, taking as a basis the production of the necessary service for three million dollars' worth of work, the total fee for the customary 6 per cent would be $180,000, two-thirds of which would be $120,000 for cost of same, leaving $60,000 for the personal service of the architect or architects, over a period of from one to three years, and this work would probably be divided between from ten to twenty projects or an average of fifteen. On each project the individual architect would receive an average of $4,000, which certainly would not be considered excessive for the time and effort involved.

"An organization such as is proposed certainly could not produce work less than economically managed and well-established private organizations can. However, let us analyze the saving that is claimed can be made by the organization proposed by the bond commission of $125,000. The impossibility of the contention can be easily shown.

The total architectural fee amounts to 6 per cent on $3,000,000—$180,000. Deducting the claimed saving of $125,000 leaves a balance of $55,000. Deducting the salaries of the architect, say, two years at $12,000 per year—$24,000; plus his first assistant, $6,000 per year—$12,000—$36,000—leaving a balance of $19,000, to pay for rent, salaries of draughtsmen, supplies etc., for two years to produce plans, including engineers' drawings, superintending etc., for $3,000,000 worth of buildings.

May Be Run at Loss.

"This should prove conclusively to anyone that the claimed saving cannot be made. Reasoning another way, assuming the cost of production of the department will be the same as it costs an independent architect, namely at $120,000 and adding the cost of a chief architect at $12,000 per year for two years and an assistant at $6,000 per year for two years adds $36,000 to the above total, or a grand total of $196,000, leaving a very pyramidal saving of $24,000, as against the claim of the adherents of the architectural department of an average saving of $125,000.

"Then, there is no proof that the department suggested by the bond commission will not be run at a loss. And if so the bill will be paid out of the bond money regardless of the cost of the bond money. Many architects of the city have been established and practicing for many years, and their past service to the city has been satisfactory in every respect. Therefore, not only as architects, but as citizens and taxpayers, they are entitled to fair and just consideration at the hands of the representatives of the city's best interests."

VANDERBILT PAPER IN LOS ANGELES SOLD FOR $100,209

Los Angeles, July 31.—Federal Judge McCormick today ordered the Illustrated Daily News, which was placed in receivership several months ago, sold to the newly formed Daily News corporation for $100,209.12.

The new company is headed by William O. Oliphant, president; William C. Lewis, vice president; and Joseph Mesner, secretary. Oliphant stated that a debt of $901,682.50, which the Daily News owed the Vanderbilt Newspapers, Inc., holding company for the three tabloid newspapers founded by Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., would be lifted automatically by the new company. He said the paper would start with a clean slate and that stockholders of the defunct Vanderbilt organization would be issued pro rata stock in the new concern.

FLOCK OF CROWS ATTACK MONKEY IN FLORIDA WOOD

Tampa, Fla., July 31.—(P)—While in the woods near this city, a group of crows attacked a monkey in a fight with a flock of crows. He said he was attracted by the noise of the crows which had surrounded the monkey in a tree top and pecking it. Stapleton fired a light rifle into the crows and brought down a crow. The monkey came down, but ran up another tree. After unsuccessful attempts to catch the monkey, Stapleton shot it. It weighed about 25 pounds and had a tail nine inches long.

A monkey escaped from an amusement park here about a year and a half ago and the one shot today is believed to be the same one.

BIRMINGHAM MAN IS SLAIN IN DUEL

Birmingham, Ala., July 31.—(P)—W. H. Yaw, painting contractor, was shot and instantly killed in a pistol duel in a downtown street today by H. L. Lee, another contractor.

Police said the men had quarreled earlier in the day and that the shooting was a culmination of a renewal of the difficulty.

The street was crowded with the Saturday night gambling crowd and men and women spectators in all directions when the bullets began to fly.

Marion, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)

With the letting of the contract to E. M. Beckham, a contractor of Perry, to build the last lap of seven and one-half miles on the National highway between Marion and Perry and the contract of the Bibb commissioners whereby they purchase 34,000 barrels of cement with which to pave the 11-mile stretch in Monroe county, work will soon be in progress on approximately all unpaved sections of the road.

Preliminary work is being done in Marion county by the Bibb county line through Houston to Perry, was let by the state highway department and approved by the Houston county commissioners. The paving will have a limestone base with a stone and asphalt surface. The work is to begin immediately and is to be completed by December 15.

Preliminary work is being done in Monroe county on the stretch between Forsyth and the Bibb county line, and local forces are expected to begin actual paving in about two weeks. The Clinchfield Cement company, near here, is to furnish the 30,000-barrel order of cement for the paving contract.

Concrete paving of other sections of the Dixie highway are under way between Forsyth, Barnesville and Miller, which will connect with the concrete paving through Spalding county. Work is soon to begin on a stretch in Clayton county which will connect with the concrete highway road will open up the longest stretch now extending from Atlanta to Jonesboro.

Paving of the Atlanta to Perry of paved highway in the state, extending from Marietta to Perry, a distance of approximately 145 miles.

HUGE CEMENT CONTRACT IS LET.

Perry, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)—The Clinchfield-Portland Cement corporation of Clinchfield, Ga., has been awarded a contract to furnish Bibb county 34,000 barrels of cement with which to pave 11.2 miles of road into Monroe county.

This plant, located on the Georgia, Southern & Florida railway, about six miles southeast of Perry, has been unable to supply the demand for their products, and an enlargement of the plant has been in progress for several months by which the capacity will be nearly doubled.

This addition will be completed in the next few weeks.

SIMS IN ATTACK ON UPSHAW RECORD

Conyers, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)—Singling out Congressman W. D. Upshaw for his principal attack, Mayor Walter A. Sims of Atlanta, addressed three gatherings in Rockdale county Saturday in the interest of his candidacy for congress. He digressed enough to pay his respects to J. J. Steele, third candidate in the race, and charge him with "bartering and trafficking with Upshaw for the office of congressman, as though it were a piece of merchandise."

In the morning at 11 o'clock Mayor Sims spoke at Milledge. From there he journeyed into the Honey Creek district and spoke at a barbecue, and in the afternoon he returned to Conyers and addressed a large crowd at the courthouse. He was introduced there by A. Whitaker.

Declaring he would expose Upshaw's record with official data, the mayor produced records of the congressman's residence in North Carolina for the past seven years; offered documentary information that Upshaw has never been successful in getting a single bill, "good or bad," passed; read copies of quorum calls showing the congressman to have been an absentee from one-third to one-half of the time in the past six years; showed where Upshaw voted to give Italy billions while the farmers of the south and the fifth district were in distress; disclosed that he voted for money to set up the world court with foreign judges, and severely criticized him for "carrying on sidelines with pay," while neglecting the needs of his constituents at home.

"The man you've employed seeks to give to a crowd of Italians billions of dollars," said the mayor, "and have you ever heard of him doing anything to relieve the drought-stricken, boll weevil, cotton flea infested districts of Georgia? Not one. With the farmers, especially of the south, crying for aid, your congressman was playing hockey from one-third to one-half of his time, and is still doing nothing to aid you.

"When the farm relief legislation was before congress he never proposed an amendment to put out what he thought was objectionable, but not one time did he put forward a substitute. 'In my first speech,' said the candidate, 'I promised that if Upshaw would show me one constructive bill that he has passed I would leave from the race and support him. Today I go even further. The records show that Upshaw has never succeeded in passing any bill, good or bad. On none of the bills introduced by him was action taken, except reference to committee. What's the use of introducing bills and taking up the time of the congress of the United States if one can't get any of them passed?

"Georgia and especially the capital district, should be represented by a man able and willing to accomplish something," continued the speaker. "I want to help the capital city and the capital district of Georgia grow greater. But this can't be accomplished with a man whom it takes eight years to get his head in."

Mayor Sims recited at some length his record as Atlanta's chief executive and asserted that he was able to back his record with "hard-earned pride." "More improvements have been made in Atlanta in the past four years than in any eight previous years," he said.

The mayor concluded with a vigorous attack upon Upshaw's advocacy of the League of Nations and world court. "In June, 1919," he stated, "Upshaw spoke in congress advocating the League of Nations and adopted as part of his speech an article written by an Atlanta lawyer. Three months ago your congressman voted to give $50,000 of your money to sustain the world court."

GRAH MAY FIGHT SENATOR GOODING

Washington, July 31.—Possibility that Senator Borah, republican of Idaho, may take a hand in a contest against the re-nomination of his colleague, Senator Gooding, was indicated today.

Senator Borah will leave Washington on Monday for his home state, where he will remain during August and September. The republican state convention in Idaho is scheduled for August 24, at which time Senator Gooding will come up for re-nomination, there being no primary law in that state. Senator Borah was unwilling to comment today on reports that he may become active in support of a candidate against Senator Gooding. It is known, however, that Senator Borah and Senator Gooding have been at odds on many propositions. It is presumed that before taking a hand in the convention contest Senator Borah will look over the situation and ascertain whether or not any activity along this line would have a chance of success.

Senator Borah indicated that he intends to make a tour of his state during the summer. This will take considerable time, he said, in view of the fact that his area is as great as all of New England plus Maryland. In accordance with his practice of past years, Senator Borah does not think he will actually attend the Idaho republican convention. He plans, it is for direct primaries and has little sympathy with the convention idea. This fact may keep him from being a factor in the nomination of a state platform, which otherwise might be regarded as embodying his ideas of what the republican party should declare for in its next national platform.

EYES OF STATE TURN ON MRAE DEBATE

George will speak in Dublin Monday, LaGrange Wednesday, and would deliver the principal address at a big barbecue in Harris county Thursday. Judge Russell's headquarters, in a statement, declared that the world court is the chief issue in the campaign and asked Senator George a series of questions concerning his position on the court and on the League of Nations. Speaking dates for Judge Russell were announced as follows: Forsyth, Monday; Dublin, Tuesday; Mr. Vernon, Wednesday; Metter, Thursday; Stillmore, Thursday night; Handhurst, Friday; Reidsville, Saturday morning; Glennville, Saturday afternoon.

The statement of Mr. Talmadge follows: "Mr. Brown saw fit to challenge me to a joint debate. He suggested McElree, my home town, as the first place, and also suggested Elberton, and suggested that these debates be extended to other points in the state. I unconditionally accepted Mr. Brown's challenge.

"Just a word of cheer to the people over the state that are really interested in defeating the Brown machine. You know there is something in the Good Book that carries this meaning: 'Make your enemies serve you.' Mr. Brown by his challenge to me, did what a great many thoughtful people over the state are really interested in. He eliminated the other candidates in this race. By Mr. Brown's challenge to me, he told the people of Georgia that the commissioner's race is Talmadge and Brown.

"The debate at McRae will be held Tuesday, August 3, at 11 a. m. To those who wish to attend this debate, I advise you to have your lunch before the debate begins.

"Accepts Invitation.
"Mr. Pace, mayor of Dawson, invited Mr. Brown and I to meet at Dawson, Wednesday, August 4, at 8 p. m. As soon as I learned that Mr. Brown's campaign manager had accepted the invitation, I will be there.

"The date for Elberton has not yet been arranged. I will accept any date named by Mr. Brown provided I have a week's notice. I wish to respectfully urge Mr. Brown to name dates and places in every congressional district of the state. The people are interested in this matter. Let's accommodate them. The people are entitled to the light. I defer to Mr. Brown the courtesy of naming the places and dates in each district. The only request I make is for him to make the full itinerary in the next week and publish it immediately.

"Remember that I am not retracting any charge that I have made against Mr. Brown. Mr. Brown denied my charges and stated in a letter to me that if I was a man of honor I would retract them. If my charges are false, Mr. Brown should have no objections to following the program outlined by him in his challenge.

Father and Son in Politics

Two members of the Talmadge family are active in Georgia politics. Eugene Talmadge, of McRae, (left) is a candidate for commissioner of agriculture and will meet J. J. Brown, commissioner, in joint debate at McRae Tuesday. Thomas R. Talmadge, (right) prominent business man of Forsyth, is backing his son's candidacy and is a member of the state democratic executive committee.

"I want every one that possibly can to come to the meetings, friends and foes alike. Ladies are especially invited. I will see that these debates are kept on a courteous and dignified basis.

"The members of the general assembly that voted for the distillation test and to reduce the oil inspectors to six are also especially invited. You lit the torch that I am now carrying on.

"I am going to hang in Mr. Brown's collar until we tear the roaring monarch down."

Stewart's Statement.

Mr. Stewart's statement follows: "My campaign is progressing very nicely. I visit fifteen to twenty counties each week, and the people in each county are rallying to me as the logical candidate to defeat the Brown machine. My friends in each county over the state are sending in very encouraging reports.

"Commencing next week, I will make one or more speeches per day. First at Canton Monday. Tuesday I will speak to the Confederate veterans of Atlanta and Fulton county at Grant Park at a picnic given them by the U. D. C. My next week's itinerary will include Rome, Cartersville, Dalton, Dawsonville, Gainesville, Carrollton and other points in north Georgia."

Russell Statement.

The statement from Russell headquarters follows:

"After some considerable delay, Senator George, as was predicted, has declined to accept Judge Russell's challenge for a series of joint debates. He assigns the very specious reason that his respect for the supreme court would not permit him to debate with one of its justices, thereby intimating that Judge Russell should resign because he is a candidate. While perhaps a very poor reason is better than admitting that he cannot face his record on the world court and farm relief on the stump, the excuse given comes with very poor grace from Senator George, as it is well known that he was for several months a candidate for the court of appeals while still serving as one of the superior courts of the Cordele circuit, and after his election continued to hold on to this position until the 31st day of December, 1916, when he resigned to be sworn in as a member of the appellate court on the first day of January, 1917, not even allowing the legal holiday.

"Press reports of Senator George's speeches show that he has at last realized that the people of this state are not going to be snubbed by their senator and dragged into the League of Nations through the back door of the world court, into which he has voted the country, and he is now trying to trim his sails to avoid being wrecked by the storm of disapproval brewed by his action in changing his announced position when a candidate for office, and voting for the world court. He now tries to dodge, and in his speeches says he is opposed to sending our boys overseas for foreign service. Just when did Senator George see the light? Certainly since he has returned to Georgia and sees that the people of this state are not as changeable as he is, and that they are still opposed to the League of Nations and its world court. He had an opportunity to express his real views in the senate, and did so by voting for the entrance of this country into the world court.

Charges Change of View.

"One who has observed Senator George's record as a senator and has heard or read his declarations when a candidate, both in 1922 and the present campaign, cannot help but be impressed by the fact that the difference in the climate of Washington and Georgia has a great deal to do with his state of mind. He changes his views on important issues as often as he crosses the state line. When in Washington he is a strong advocate of the League of Nations, the world court, and the policy of internationalism which the American people are determined to avoid. When in Georgia he is opposed to all these things. If he were permitted to vote on these matters from some point in Georgia, his views would coincide with those of the people of Georgia, but unfortunately for these people, he must be in Washington to vote.

"While Senator George seems willing enough to debate the issues of the day with Judge Russell through the press and at long range, when a joint meeting from the same platform is suggested he says that there is nothing to debate. But there are some important questions in the minds of the people of Georgia, affecting children yet unborn, which Senator George should answer. He should answer them publicly.

Questions Propounded.

"Senator George, now that you have voted for the world court of the League of Nations, how do you stand on the League of Nations, still agitated by the interests and foreign propaganda? Are you for the league, against it, or have you a reservation?"

"Senator George, a resolution will be introduced at the next senate to undo what you have done and to take this country out of the world court. Are you for it, against it, or have you some reservation or amendment?"

"If you are sincere in stating that you are opposed to sending our boys overseas to fight and die in wars that

Socialists Gave Aid To Italian Revolution Plot

(Copyright, 1925, for The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Rome, July 31.—A complete report from Fecome against the five accomplices who are charged with intending to overthrow the fascist government beginning with the murder of Premier Mussolini, declares that the socialist party in Czechoslovakia donated 300,000 French francs toward the anti-fascist result.

The report reiterates that it is convinced Signor Zaniboni intended to show from a hotel window when Premier Mussolini was replying to ovations from under his balcony at Chigi palace November 4, and traces the various phases of the anti-fascist movement since the murder of Deputy Matteotti, the powerful socialist, in June of 1924.

The organization at that time of groups in Italy of liberal, patriotic, and Garibaldi legions by the opposition was made with a direct design of revolution, the report declares. The government stopped this in January of 1925, when these organizations, among whose leaders was the grandson of the great Italian hero, Garibaldi, were abolished by decree. The opposition was discouraged, but in July, 1925, Signor Zaniboni, with Gen-

Small Boy Dies As Fire Destroys Kentucky Home

Olympian Springs, Ky., July 31.—

Fire early Friday at the colonial homestead of Mrs. Elizabeth Ingram, 80, near here, resulted in the death of Willie Ingram, 14, and serious burns to an aunt, Mrs. McKinley, of California, it became known here today.

The little girl was trapped on the second floor and Mrs. McKinley was burned in rescuing her 7-year-old daughter from the flames. A Mrs. Long, also of California, sustained a sprained ankle and minor cuts and bruises when she rescued her 5-year-old son and then jumped from the second story.

Eighteen persons, some of whom had come from California to attend a family reunion, were asleep in the house when the fire was discovered. The body of the Ingram girl was recovered.

LEE MODE LOSES FIGHT TO REMAIN OUT OF PRISON

Port Payne, Ala., July 31.—(AP)—

Lee Mode will have to return to the Arkansas penitentiary, it was decided here today when Judge Woodson J. Martin, of Gadsden, heard Mode's application for a writ of habeas corpus. Mode was pardoned by Lieutenant Governor McCall, of Arkansas, while Governor Thomas Terral was absent from the state last fall.

Judge Martin denied the habeas corpus application but granted Mode's counsel fifteen days in which to prepare mandamus proceedings. During that time Mode will remain in jail here, the court ruled. The young man has been in jail for several weeks, since his arrest by local officers.

The state of Arkansas contends that Mode's pardon, as well as others issued by the lieutenant governor last fall, was illegal because sufficient notice of application for pardon was not published in Arkansas newspapers. Other prisoners have been returned on the same account. Governor Terral was attending a meeting in Birmingham when news arrived that the Arkansas lieutenant governor had issued several pardons. The governor immediately left for Arkansas where he began proceedings to bring about the arrest of every man to whom freedom had been granted by his chief aide.

SENATOR JOHNSON TO TAKE STUMP IN FALL CAMPAIGN

San Francisco, July 31.—(AP)—

Back home again today from Washington, United States Senator Hiram Johnson let it be known he intended to oppose from the stump the reelection of his colleague, United States Senator Samuel Shortridge. He also will oppose the reelection of Governor Friend W. Richardson.

He will support Judge Robert M. Clarke, of Los Angeles, for Shortridge's seat in the senate because Clarke, among other things, is denouncing the world court. Senator Johnson will support Lieutenant Governor C. C. Young for governor.

GOOD TOURIST SEASON FOR FLORIDA EVIDENT

Inquiries being received by The Constitution's information bureau for routings and condition reports on roads from the middle west and other points to Florida indicate a tourist year equal to the best seasons in the past, according to O. J. Willoughby who has operated this department for The Constitution since its inception six years ago.

Analysis of these inquiries indicates a return to Florida of the bona-fide tourist as winter visitor who goes to the southern peninsula purely for its climate and resort facilities. Many of these inquiries ask specifically about hotel rates and whether or not the overcrowded conditions exist for some time past will be repeated this winter.

The Constitution's bureau answers all inquiries as to routes and conditions, while the matter of hotel rates and conditions in Florida are left largely to the leaders of that state, who emphatically assert that rates and service will be the most favorable in many years and that with the opening of many new hotels and a decrease in the number of speculators who have required unlimited accommodations in the past, there will be ample accommodations for all winter visitors, though they advise early reservations as they all see a great increase in winter visitors this year.

The Constitution's road bureau serves without charge all who call at our bureau—first floor, first counter to right of entrance. Those who cannot come in person and make specific requests for routings are given the same service through the mails when 10 cents postage accompanies the inquiry.

To get the information available in this bureau, Constitution pathfinder cars annually drive from 25,000 to 40,000 miles of roads.

COMMITTEES FORMED ON STONE MOUNTAIN

The Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, the Atlanta Hotel Men's association and the Atlanta Improvement association have created standing committees on the Stone Mountain Memorial association, it was announced Saturday.

W. D. Hoffman heads the trade body organization and will be assisted by A. L. Myers, A. J. Orme and Preston S. Arkwright. The committee of the hotel men's organization consists of W. C. Royer, chairman; H. A. Finkel, James E. Six, Harry F. Zobel and Frank T. Reynolds. George H. Boyton will have charge of the improvement association committee and other members are Frank H. Neely, S. N. Freeman and Paul W. Duffee.

Creation of the committees is in line with similar action taken recently by the Atlanta Federation of Trades and the Atlanta Retail Merchants' association. It is expected that action of these bodies will be followed by similar steps on part of other civic organizations.

White Hearing To Be Resumed Monday Morning

Following a recess of Fulton superior court Friday afternoon until Monday morning at 9 o'clock, trial of W. H. White, Jr., former president of White Provision company, charged with embezzling more than $218,000 of the concern's funds, is slated to continue throughout the ensuing week.

Only six witnesses have been placed on the stand by the prosecution which is being conducted for the state by Assistant Solicitor Ed A. Stephens. Mr. Stephens is being assisted by Assistant Solicitor John H. Hudson. At the state's table may be seen Solicitor John A. Boykin, who is disqualified from prosecuting the case because of the fact that he is a stockholder in the provision company, and William Burckel, secretary-treasurer of the concern.

The defense counsel is composed of attorneys Ben Conyers, Paul S. Scheridge, William Schley Howard and James A. Branch.

THUNDERSHOWERS, LOW TEMPERATURE, SUNDAY WEATHER

Local thundershowers, with no change in temperature, is Sunday's weather dial, according to C. F. von Herrmann, meteorologist of the local weather bureau.

Saturday's highest temperature was 82 degrees, while the lowest point touched by the mercury was 72 degrees. The temperature range today will be about the same with a low of perhaps 70 degrees being experienced during the early morning hours, Mr. von Herrmann predicted Saturday.

GIRL PREACHER SPEAKS TODAY AT SAINT PAUL'S

Floyd Butler, the 12-year-old girl preacher of St. Paul's Methodist church, will conduct the service tonight at 8 o'clock. Miss Butler, who is daughter of W. H. Butler, of the Business Men's Evangelistic club, was called to preach several years ago. She has already held many services in the smaller churches, but this will be her first appearance before the great congregation of her own people. A junior choir and orchestra will assist their girl associate in the musical program, and the general public is invited.

The pastor, Rev. L. Wilkie Collins, will preach at the morning service on the subject, "Builders and Destroyers." This will be a keynote sermon for the opening of a three months' campaign for a "greater St. Paul's," and goals have been set for progress in all departments.

MOTOR CLUB REPORTS ROADS IMPROVING

While some roads in Georgia remain muddy and slippery as the result of recent heavy rains, others are drying out and approaching normalcy, according to information reaching the Atlanta Motor club Saturday. Occasional showers, however, are expected that motorists contemplating trips into the country this week-end will be in touch with the offices of the club where detailed information is available any time during the day or night.

Latest reports show roads from Stone Mountain to Athens and those around Tallulah Falls, to be in fair condition; those around Augusta and Savannah are very good; around Milledgeville and Acworth, very slippery; and around Americus and Hawkinsville, in poor condition; detours are necessary.

GEORGIA CASUALTY PAYS USUAL DIVIDEND

W. E. Small, president of the Georgia Casualty company, was president speaker at a monthly meeting of the board of directors held recently, at which time the usual semi-annual dividend of 6 per cent was declared and paid.

In his review of the operations of the company for the past six months, Mr. Small stated that the company was the only line of business that had not proven satisfactory, but the Georgia Casualty company was not alone in that respect, for a great many companies were having the same experience in this line.

J. W. McDaniel Buried in West View Cemetery

Funeral services for J. W. McDaniel, 52, of 284 Hemphill street, were held Saturday afternoon at 2 p. m. at the funeral home of Rev. W. H. Bell officiating, and burial was in West View cemetery. Mr. McDaniel was assistant manager of the Georgia Casualty company, a half-brother, A. G. Allen, Georgia Tech, and a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. Besides his half-brother, he is survived by a nephew, George A. Allen, Fall River, Mass., and a son, J. W. McDaniel, Jr., of 1100 E. 11th St. and John Ray Patton.

MILLIKAN'S RAYS WILL PENETRATE LAYER OF LEAD

Washington, July 31.—(AP)—The principle of Millikan's newly discovered, powerfully penetrating rays, is described in the Smithsonian institution's annual report, now being prepared, as based on the shortness of the wave lengths used, which are 2,000 meters shorter than those of the ordinary X-ray.

Whereas a thin sheet of lead will stop X-rays the report says, the Millikan's ray will travel through a layer of lead six feet thick.

"It seems that all space is alive with these rays," the report continues. "They do not originate on the earth but come in to us with the velocity of light from the greatest universe beyond the atmosphere. Probably they are formed by the breaking up of the atoms which compose the stars."

GIRL, HIT BY AUTO, PAINFULLY BRUISED

Mary Temple, 15, of 609 Highland avenue, was painfully bruised early Saturday night when knocked down by an automobile driven by D. H. Thomas, of Decatur, Ga. The child received emergency treatment at Georgia Baptist hospital and later was permitted to leave. Thomas reported the accident to police, but no case has been made.

COWBOY HONORS AT SESQUI WON BY NOWATA SLIM

Philadelphia, July 31.—(AP)—Nowata Slim, Lenapah, Okla., was declared the best all-around cowboy in the United States at the end of three weeks' rodeo under auspices of the sesqui-centennial exposition, here tonight. Mabel Strickland, Fort Worth, Texas, was announced as the best all-around cowgirl.

A rotor windmill has been devised which is based on the same principle as Flettner's rotor ship and which is said to generate much more power than ordinary windmills.

Louisa Candler Joins Opera Ballet for Week

Miss Louisa Candler as one of the ballet girls in "Sari."

BY PAUL STEVENSON.

When scouts for Flo Ziegfeld, George White and other caterers to the needs of the tired business men go to the Atlanta theatre this week to see "Sari" in search of new talent for their revues and notice one sprightly little damsel in the front row, fourth from the right, dancing away like a premier danseuse, they might as well drive on to the next stop. There isn't no 'taters. She's good looking enough and has the pep and ginger of a regular professional but she won't succumb to the lure of Metropolitan engagements.

She is Miss Louisa Candler, one of the attractive daughters of C. Howard Candler, president of the Municipal Opera association, and she has joined the chorus for a week—just for a lark.

So Mr. Ziegfeld, et al. will have to gaze wistfully at her, but in resignation, because there is no wolf going to knock hard enough at her door to force her to the stage to earn a livelihood.

Pretty Miss Candler is about sixteen years old and is in the sub-deb class. And being in the sub-deb class means that you are a regular guy, that you've got everything and can get away with murder, if necessary. Nobody has even seen a "dud" among the sub-debs because there isn't no such animal. Miss Candler is one of the most attractive of the species and she's set a new mark for her companions to shoot at now, since she's going to be a chorus girl for a week.

For two weeks Louisa has been dancing and panting under the tutelage of Lew Morton, stage director, and she's rated as one of the nicest steppers in the "Sari" ballet.

Lew Morton says she's good and he knows. He said if the hard parental hand of C. Howard, which is not hard, ever grasps Louisa by the nape of the neck to thrust her out into the cruel hazards of Atlanta, which has no blizzards, that he'll give her a job all right.

BENNETT ELECTED CHAIRMAN OF LOCAL ENGINEERS' BODY

C. E. Bennett, manager of the electrical department of the Georgia Railway and Power company, was elected chairman of the Atlanta section of the American Institute of

Other officers elected were: E. H. Bailey, of the General Electric company, vice chairman; W. F. Oliver, of the Southern Bell Telephone company, secretary-treasurer; and W. E. Gathright, of the Western Electric company, and H. E. Bueger, of the General Electric company, directors. The electrical engineers elected as their representatives on the executive committee of the Affiliated Technical Societies of Atlanta, H. L. Wills, of the Georgia Railway and Power company, and H. N. Fry, of the Southern Eastern Underwriters association.

He has also made important contributions to the development of the science of electrical engineering through inventions of new electrical equipment and devices which are used widely. He is in charge of all electrical construction and operation

Automobile Body Hits Compulsory Car Insurance

Washington, July 31.—(AP)—Compulsory automobile liability insurance, advocated in many parts of the United States as a means to promote safety, is opposed by the American Automobile association.

In a statement today, the association said an investigation of several years had led it to the conclusion that compulsory insurance would breed recklessness rather than promote greater care, and subject the "car owners in mass a burden of $300,000,000 in compulsory premiums to provide protection against a comparatively few motorists who are financially irresponsible."

WARREN COUNCIL VOTES TO RETAIN FORCE OF POLICE

Warren, Ohio, July 31.—(AP)—Warren city council tonight accepted the civic committee's offer of $10,000 to finance the safety department for a month and in turn passed an ordinance repealing the emergency ordinance which declared the police force abolished.

MINERS ARE WORKING TO RESCUE COMRADES

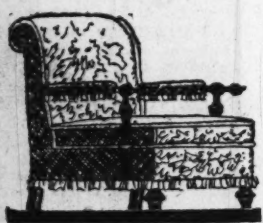

Denver, Colo., July 31.—(AP)—Two and a half miles underground from the west portal of the Moffat tunnel and almost directly beneath the apex of James Peak, four picked crews of eight men each tonight were toiling tirelessly to reach five comrades buried beneath tons of debris by a cave-in yesterday.

The men were trapped Friday morning when the side of the tunnel in which they were working gave way. H. T. Thompson, 23, who was working near the mouth, was brought out but died last night of his injuries.

NEED SEEN GEORGIA FARM

J. E. Morton, of the State College of Agriculture marketing department, in an interview with The Week, tells a story of actual results on a Georgia farm of 40 acres, six of which are in buildings and pastures, and only 34 acres in cultivation, which is illustrating as to farming possibilities in the Empire State.

"I have just returned," Mr. Morton says, "from a business visit to the home and farm of J. F. Cargyle, at Ocala, Fla. It is a practical illustration of the results of modern farming. Mr. Cargyle has just finished figuring up the results from three acres of tomatoes, which he sold in Atlanta and many markets at $4 a crate. He netted between six and seven hundred dollars from the three acres.

"That, however, is something of a side line with him, and was not what took me to his place. He has put in three acres of big stem Jersey sweet potatoes, and I went down to talk with him about packing and shipping them, and to find out what it any help he would need in getting them marketed. His crop is one of the prettiest I have ever seen. We grabbed under several of the plants, to get a look at the prospective results and find that every hill has from five to seven well-developed potatoes of rich, golden color when broken.

"He is preparing to market them in Leeway hampers, the best container he has, and they will bring him a yield of about 125 bushels to the acre, at the time he intends to dig them for early marketing. Of course, the yield would be even greater for later digging. Figured on the available market price for the variety he is producing, the return will run over $1,200 from these three acres.

"His method of farming, too, proves the value of careful study and scientific operation. This year Mr. Cargyle has planted beans where he had potatoes last year, and his records show he has sold several hundred dollars' worth of beans on the ground used last year for potatoes.

"Besides his big stem Jerseys he has three acres of Porto Rico yams which will run a yield of about 150 bushels to the acre, and on these he will realize just about the same return in cash as on the Jerseys.

"The figures given by Mr. Morton, taken from the records kept by Mr. Cargyle, indicate a return to this Georgia farmer of between three and four thousand dollars from a farm of 34 acres of cleared land which, he says, does not take into account a flock of magnificent Rhode Island Red chickens, some fine Jersey cows, and a proportionate number of hogs on the place. And these are in addition to fruit trees enough to supply all the family wants, and more grapes than he can use at home.

"The point stressed by Mr. Morton is the result that can be had in Georgia from careful, intensive farming on not too much land, and by close attention to the proper crops and the demands of the markets, particularly in the vicinity for certain of the truck crops, like beans, cucumbers, etc.

"Ships Many Potatoes. Mr. Morton says there will be between 200 and 275 cars of potatoes shipped to market from the territory around Lyons, in Thomas county, along this year and upward of 150 cars of this crop will be marketed on the co-operative plan. Four years ago the same section was not raising any of this crop for the market.

"Illustrating the fact that this is not by any means an isolated case, James D. Weaver, president of the Farmers' union, member of the Georgia house of representatives, and a prominent business man and large farmer of Toccoa, once tells the story of an Indiana farmer and his family who came back to Georgia after a trip to Florida and found a house of farm land with a house on it. He was offered a tract of 25 acres with a house in bad repair, which he bought and which the owner was glad to get rid of. It was his first year in farming in the south and the new-comer, after repairing and remodeling the house, put his lands into various crops of the kind being planted by Mr. Cargyle.

"One of the old-method community who men took it on himself to commiserate with the Indiana farmer, according to Mr. Weaver, and express regret that he would not be able to make a living on that little piece of ground. To which the Indiana farmer replied: 'That's been worrying me, too, because I'm going to do so well on these 25 acres this year; but I have found out that I am going to do powerfully well on 15 acres of it next year.'

CROOKED KNEES OF GIRLS BLAMED ON BAD FEEDING

London, July 31.—Few women have straight knees, says the eminent surgeon, Sir William Arbuthnot Lane, who is making a campaign for the greater use of simple foods in an endeavor to build up the constitutions of males and females.

"We always have known that very few men have perfectly straight normal legs and knees," says Sir William. "And now that women wear such short skirts anyone who takes the trouble to make an observation when the winds are whistling through the streets of London will ascertain that very few women have straight knees. It is all due to early disease caused by bad feeding."

Sir William says the man in the African jungle who is called by the white people "a bone-bent savage," is far superior physically to the white man. "A Zulu warrior will run 50 miles without being tired," declares Sir William. "And he surpasses any Greek god in beauty of body."

Motor Vehicle Receipts Gain Over $300,000

Receipts of the state motor vehicle department of the office of Secretary of State S. G. McLenon were greater by $387,025 for the first seven months of 1926, than for the corresponding period the previous year, according to figures made public Saturday by Charles Cook, cashier.

Up to July 31 receipts in 1926 amounted to $3,158,766 as compared to $2,771,741 for the same period in 1925. After August 1 all automobile license tags purchased for new machines or for machines which have not been in operation since March 1 are sold at half price for the full year. During this seven months period this year the department sold 26,074 more tags for passenger cars and 5,121 more tags for trucks than were sold during the same period the previous year. This year up to July 31, 212,642 passenger tags were sold as compared with 185,965 during the same period the previous year. During the first seven months of this year 30,786 truck tags were sold as compared with 25,667 truck tags sold during the same period last year.

Summersville, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)—The 25th annual meeting of the Chattahoochee county Masonic convention, held at Menlo, Wednesday and Thursday, drew the largest number of Masons from this section in the history of the organization.

Wednesday's program was devoted to the business of the convention, election of officers and the conferring of the third degree by a picked team. John M. Rose, of Leroy, who was elected worshipful master of the convention when it was organized 25 years ago and who has served continuously since that time, was re-elected for life. A. E. Strange, of Berryton, was elected deputy master; J. W. A. Justice, of Trion, was re-elected for the 21st time as senior warden; John L. Hall, of Menlo, junior warden; H. C. Gilbert, of near Summersville, senior deacon; Joe Williams, of Trion, junior deacon; Roy Humphill, of Summersville, senior steward; J. T. Leath, of Menlo, junior steward, and Sam C. Martin, of Summersville, was re-elected for the 21st consecutive time as secretary and treasurer of the organization. Trion was selected as the place for the 1927 meeting, which will be held on the fourth Wednesday and Thursday in July.

George M. Napier, of Atlanta, attorney general of Georgia, was the principal speaker at the public exercises held Thursday. Other speakers were Colonel Claude H. Brown, of Rome; Judge M. C. Turner, of Dalton; Judge J. P. Highsmith, of Brunswick; and others. The welcome address, on behalf of the Masons, was delivered by the Rev. John G. Black, of Trion, to which Colonel Claude H. Porter, of Rome, responded. The public exercises were held at the Menlo Baptist church, where an interesting program of music, song, readings, recitations, etc., was carried out. At the noon hour a famous Georgia barbecue and picnic dinner was served.

GOVERNOR FERGUSON AGAIN URGED TO QUIT

Dallas, Texas, July 31.—(AP)—Immediate resignation of Governor William A. Ferguson in compliance with terms of an election challenge entered into with Dan Moody, the successful candidate for the democratic nomination for governor, was urged today in resolutions adopted by or ready for submission to at least eight county democratic conventions.

Travis county, in which is Austin, the state capital; Williamson county, the home of Dan Moody; Bowie and Tarrant counties, in which is Fort Worth, were among the counties responding to the resolutions adopted. The Travis county convention also urged a repeal of the amnesty bill which restored to James E. Ferguson the right to hold state office when he was impeached in 1914 from the office of governor.

FOURTH CANDIDATE IN MAYOR'S RACE

Interest in city politics was centered on the mayoralty race when a fourth-corned race was assured Saturday by the announcement and qualification of Robert A. Gordon, prominent Atlanta business man and civic leader.

Only 12 days now remain in which candidates for positions in municipal affairs may qualify and this week is expected to bring out the final group of candidates. A number of new qualifications were made during the past week in aldermanic, councilmanic and judges races and several others have indicated they will qualify during the coming week.

Mr. Gordon placed himself in the race for mayor Saturday when he paid his entrance fee to W. J. Laney, secretary of the city democratic executive committee. Although it had been rumored that he probably would make the race, no definite announcement was made until Saturday.

He will be opposed by I. N. Ragdale, Charles M. Ford and J. Allen Couch. In giving out his announcement, Mr. Gordon declared that it was done at the insistent request of hundreds of friends from all parts of the city. For more than four years he has been urged to stand for mayor, he said.

Served as Councilman.
Mr. Gordon, who has been a resident of Atlanta for more than 20 years, is a native of Georgia, being born near Griffin. Since coming to Atlanta he has been prominent in business, civic and fraternal circles. He made a phenomenal success in the furniture business and for 20 years was vice president and general manager of the American Furniture company.

Serving for two terms as councilman from the fourth ward and being elected for the second term as alderman from his ward, Mr. Gordon has kept in close touch with the city political situation. He retired a few months before the expiration of his second term as alderman because of ill health but stated Saturday that he has fully regained his health.

"I will sponsor only such measures," Mr. Gordon said, "as will work to the best interests of the city. One of my endeavors will be toward 500,000 population in Atlanta by 1930."

"In entering this race, I am not entering as a candidate for any clique or faction but as a representative of all the people of Atlanta. My slogan will ever be, 'A greater and better Atlanta, with progress and justice for all.'"

Mr. Gordon stated that he would issue his platform within a few days.

Interest Growing.
Other races than the mayoralty race are drawing considerable attention as lines in the various political factions begin to form more clearly.

Five candidates for various positions qualified during the week and others indicated their qualification fees would be paid before August 12, the closing day for paying entrance fees.

Two three-cornered races for councilmanic posts were assured during the week when G. Everett Millican qualified for the race from the tenth ward and J. W. Weaver qualified from the second ward. Howard C. McCutcheon and John W. Bolton have entered the councilmanic race from the second ward. Other entries from the tenth ward are W. Garland Cooper and J. D. Wootan.

Unless other candidates announce for posts in the board of education those races will be quiet as there is now only one entrant from each ward. George W. Powell qualified for the race from the ninth ward during the past week by paying his entrance fee.

Lively races are expected in the two divisions of recorder's court, although only one entry has been made for the race for recorder of the second division. Thomas H. Goodwin qualified Saturday by paying his entrance fee. A. W. Callaway, now recorder in the first division, has qualified for reelection and will have as an opponent, John L. Cone.

List of Candidates.
A complete list of qualified candidates for the various races was announced Saturday by Mr. Laney, follows:

For mayor, Charles M. Ford, J. Allen Couch, Robert A. Gordon and I. N. Ragdale; for alderman, from the first ward, R. F. Pennington; second ward, Dr. P. L. Moon; sixth ward, R. E. Gordin; ninth ward, Oscar H. Williamson and Alvin L. Richards; eleventh ward, J. C. Murphy and Foster L. Hunter; for council, from the first ward, E. Walter Trapp and H. T. Loehr; second ward, J. W. Weaver, John W. Bolton and Howard C. McCutcheon; third ward, Charles L. Choate; fourth ward, Dr. C. J. Vaughan and J. E. Berman; fifth ward, T. C. Morris; sixth ward, short term, Harry Roberts and Jack Hardy; seventh ward, Wiley J. Moore; eighth ward, Frank H. Reynolds; ninth ward, Jack C. Savage and C. D. Knight; tenth ward, G. Everett Millican, W. Garland Cooper and J. D. Wootan; eleventh ward, W. R. Johnson and George B. Lyle; twelfth ward, H. M. Rantin; board of education, ninth ward, George W. Powell; tenth ward, Thomas C. Smith; eleventh ward, Mrs. Paul West, and twelfth ward, James A. Steele.

Radio and Platform Boosted as Moulders Of Public Opinion

Williamstown, Mass., July 31.—(AP) Denying the assertion yesterday that Arthur Draper, assistant editor of The New York Herald-Tribune, that the press is the greatest influence in moulding public opinion, Sir Frederick Wylie, first president of the Indian legislative assembly, maintained today that radio and the platform are equally potent.

Speaking before the Institute of Politics, he declared that radio in particular, through its freedom from business influence, might be an unmitigated benefit in promoting international understanding, where the press would fail because of the high concentration of ownership in it.

He acknowledged that public opinion was a powerful factor in determining the course of events, citing the British coal strike settlement as the "most outstanding evidence of the fact. The strike was defeated, he said, not by the government, but by the working of a public opinion that seized upon the one salient fact that the strike was an illegitimate effort to influence the politics of the country."

FISHING IS BARRED ON HIS VACATION
BY SENATOR BORAH

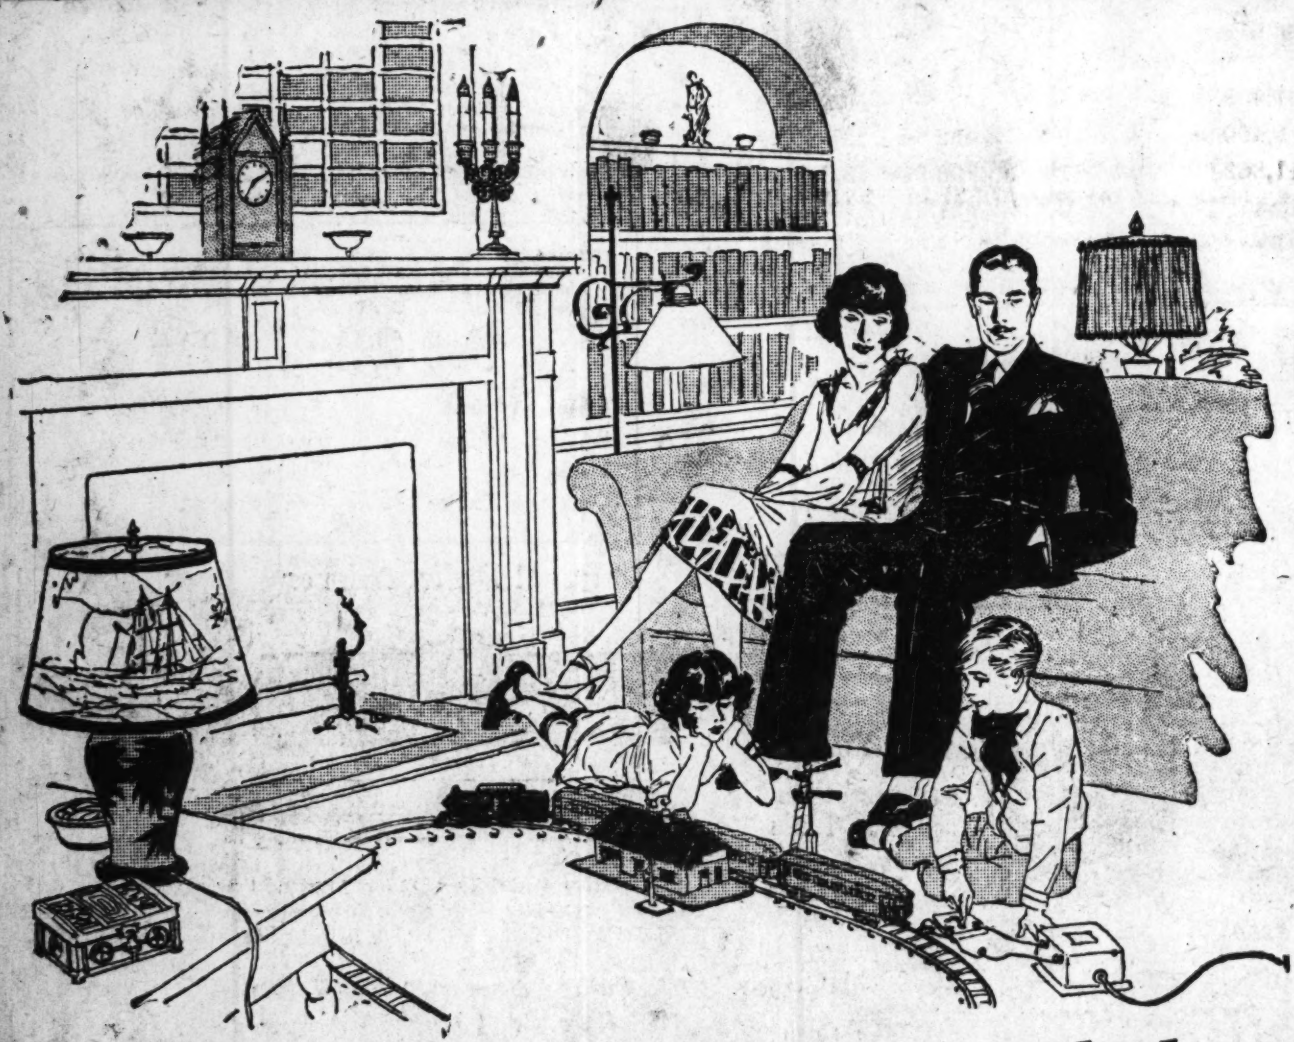

Washington, July 31.—Senator Borah, of Idaho, will not do any fishing during his two-month vacation in Idaho.

He made this known today when asked if he would follow the example of President Coolidge, who has booked several large ones in the lake near his summer camp.

"It would be plagiarism," Borah said. The Idaho senator left here tonight.

MEETING OPENS SOON AT INDIAN SPRINGS

Jackson, Ga., July 31.—(Special.) Advance reports show that the 25th annual session of the Indian Springs Holiness camp meeting, to be held this year from August 6 to 16, will probably establish a new record for attendance.

The grounds and buildings are now being placed in condition for the opening of this assembly. New driveways have been opened, several new cottages constructed, the waterworks system enlarged and a singers' cottage completed. Fifteen or twenty of the cottages are already occupied and others will move in shortly to augment the summer colony at this, the south's largest camp ground.

Announcement is made that the leaders for this year include Dr. Will H. Huff, of Sioux City, Iowa, and Rev. C. W. Roth, of Indianapolis, Ind. Hamp Sewell, of Atlanta, will again direct the music and will be assisted by a special chorus. Mrs. J. M. Glenn, of Dublin, will have charge of the Young People's work, and Rev. E. L. Eaton and Miss Clairbelle Eaton, of Wilmore, Ky., will direct the life-service work. The Taylor university quartet, Highland, Ind., will assist in the music.

Thousands of vocalists have sung and are singing at this very moment. "Sweet Miss Mary," Frank L. Stanton's musical gem, but it remained for 11-year-old Sarah Fellers to carol its entrancing melody before Georgia's poet laureate, the first time it fell upon his ears.

Her soft brown eyes gazed with pleading expression into the kindly brown eyes of Mr. Stanton's that "twinkle in the sunshine" appearing before him quite recently in his office on the editorial floor of The Constitution.

She had come on a very purposeful mission, eagerly seeking an audition with the scholarly gentleman who writes his prose and poetry amid the customary bustle and noise accompanying the preparation of a metropolitan newspaper.

Birthday Celebration.
It concerned the birthday celebration of brown-eyed Miss Mary Lin, principal of Edgewood school, at which Little Sarah Fellers, a sixth grade pupil, had been selected to sing "Sweet Miss Mary." On Sarah's own initiative came the request for Mr. Stanton to change the line in the song which sings of blue eyes rather than brown, flowing along in this dialect metre:

"You des take a litt' of de bluest of de skies,
A cloud for de lashes and you got Miss Mary's eyes
Dat's de way you feelin' w'en dey lookin' sweet at you
Dey twinkle in de sunshine, an' it's raintin' round 'em too."

Mr. Stanton, who is a great lover of children, informed the little lady that he had never heard the music of his song, as no one had ever offered to sing it for him. "I'll sing it for you," she said, and clasping her hands behind her in a most striking and innocent child-like pose, and with a rare smile upon her lovely little face, she stood before Georgia's poet laureate and sang sweetly the words of "Sweet Miss Mary." The picture brought applause from those among the listeners.

It was indeed a picture presenting child-like faith and happiness. Although Mr. Stanton explained in the gentle manner in which only Mr. Stanton can explain, that blue eyes could not be changed to brown in this instance, a contented little girl went home to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Fellers, on Ferguson street, radiating her delight at having been the favored one to bring pleasure to the distinguished Georgian.

COLUMBUS BODY
INDORSSES WOOD FOR GOVERNOR

Columbus, Ga., July 31.—(Special.) Voicing opposition to further tax burdens on the people through issuance of road bonds, local group No. 62 of the World Educational alliance adopted resolutions today endorsing the candidacy of J. O. Wood for governor.

The resolutions were based on the findings of a committee which reported that from a careful perusal of the platforms and records of the four candidates it was learned that the public stand taken against bonds by John N. Holder is "inconsistent with past performances," that Dr. L. G. Hardman has completely reversed his position by expressing opposition and then favoring a $300,000,000 bond issue; that George Carswell has reversed his position repeatedly, and that J. O. Wood voted against road bonds in the legislative assembly and has steadfastly adhered to his position in the present speaking campaign.

Mr. Wood, here in the interest of his race, addressed the group of the World Educational alliance, and will return here on Thursday, August 12, to deliver a public address under auspices of the alliance.

ELBERTON KIWANIS PLAN ATLANTA TRIP

Elberton, Ga., July 31.—(Special.) At today's luncheon of the Elberton Kiwanis club final plans for the excursion to Atlanta Thursday, August 5, were made. President Clark Edwards reported that arrangements for the day in Atlanta had been perfected, and that Atlanta had given him wonderful cooperation. The Rotary club has endorsed the excursion, and will give its support to it.

The recent fine rains wetting every section of the country, including those dry since first of April, have given the people new hope, and it is now thought the train offered by the Seaboard will be taxed to its limit. At the capitol the governor and statehouse officers are expected to greet the party, and through the courtesy of Mayor Sims they will enjoy the cyclorama. Several members of the club have arranged to take as guests many of the children of the rural schools who otherwise would not be able to go. Special effort is being made to get those who have never been to Atlanta to take the trip.

The Seaboard furnishes a special non-stop train for the trip.

Baron Arrested Trying To Keep Suicide Pact

RUSSIAN NOBLE SOUGHT TO FOLLOW WIFE TO GRAVE

FINANCIAL WORRY CAUSE OF TRAGEDY

Baron, Who Lost Leg Fighting Bolsheviks, Was Dependent on Wife's Earnings as Singer.

Miami, Fla., July 31.—(AP)—Baron Royce-Garrett was taken in custody in a thick, 100 yards from the Arch Creek railroad station, early tonight for questioning in connection with the suicide of his wife, the Baroness Royce-Garrett, who Friday night leaped to death from the 18th floor of the Everglades hotel here.

Police who arrested the baron said he was attempting to hang himself with a small piece of twine.

The man told his story readily and, although composed, his attitude was one of detachment. Police were undecided as to their next move, although it was announced that the baron would be held under a technical charge until a coroner's jury investigates the death of the baroness at a meeting Monday.

Inquest Postponed.

The coroner's jury was to have met late today, but earlier in the evening police announced that it would be postponed until Monday in the belief that the baron could be located.

Baron Royce-Garrett said he read Friday night in an early edition of a Miami paper that an unidentified woman had leaped to death from the Everglades hotel tower. He said he knew when he read the article that the woman was his wife.

The baron's only expression concerning his wife was one of disappointment that she had not kept an agreement made seven years ago with him that they would "die together."

Baroness Royce-Garrett, the baron had questioned, was taken to her apartments in Coral Gables early Friday morning, and not to return home until the last trolley car had run on the Coral Gables interurban line.

Baron Royce-Garrett bought a pair and discovered his wife was dead. He said he then walked on his knees to Coral Gables, a distance of five miles, and sat in front of the hotel until daylight, speculating on methods of killing himself. He did not return to his apartments in the Cla-Reina hotel.

Determined to Die.

At daybreak the baron obtained a rifle from a passing motorist and awaited in downtown Miami, where he procured a bit of twine, such as is used in tying express packages. With this concealed in his pocket he boarded a bus bound for Arch Creek, ten miles north of downtown Miami, determined to hang himself to a tree in that vicinity. He already had failed in an effort to climb a tree in Coral Gables.

He selected what he termed a suitable tree and sat down to await the fall of night.

The baron amused himself during the long tropic day by calling to the birds that twittered about his retreat, and for more than an hour a small monkey kept him company in the treetops. He could not explain where the monkey came from. Police believe he had brought it with him.

GOVERNMENT HITS LIQUOR MAKERS THROUGH PURSES

Detailed List of Tax Assessments Is Sent Out to All Prohibition Administrators.

BY THOMAS L. STOKES.

Washington, July 31.—The government has opened a new prohibition offensive based on the theory that the pocketbook is the most vulnerable point of attack. Taxes will be the weapon, and it will be used against all forms of liquor manufacturing, legal and illegal.

The marching orders were issued to all prohibition administrators, internal revenue collectors and other agencies today by the treasury, in the form of a detailed list of tax assessments, some of which become effective for the first time on August 1. These new taxes were levied by the last congress.

Order Seen Between Lines.

There is no command in the instructions, merely the lengthy list of tax schedules, but between the lines is the order for all prohibition agencies to go the limit.

While these taxes hit all along the line, from the big operator to the small one, it is understood that they will be a weapon particularly against the host of "one-still" bootleggers and the home-brewers who have renewed their activity recently. Other recent drastic steps have been taken in an effort to dry up the big sources.

Many of the taxes are not new. They have been on the books, and have netted a large revenue. The new instructions mean that the revenue is on a large scale, this tax money is to be used more judiciously than ever before.

Twenty Dollars Tax on Stills.

The small fry bootleggers, who operate on a small scale, and the home-brewers will be hit by a tax of $20 each on every still and every worm manufactured, which is aimed at cutting down the production of this equipment. Just what size business this is may be learned from records showing that 17,344 stills and 7,850 worms were seized by prohibition agents last year, and no one knows how many are operating.

This tax on stills and worms is but a small part of the new taxes for every manufacturer of liquor, whether legal or illegal. If not for beverage uses, there is a tax of $2.20 a gallon on distilled spirits. Suppose a bootlegger is caught, however, with several gallons of liquor on hand. Every gallon of this liquor is assessed a tax of $8.40 if the bootlegger has not paid the non-beverage tax. If he has, it is subtracted, and he pays $4.20 on every gallon. Where the operation is on a large scale, this tax money, as can be seen.

Looking at the records again, it is discovered that 1,102,787 gallons of spirits were seized last year. The tax on this, provided no non-beverage tax had been paid, would be $7,088,836.80. Quite a sum.

More liquors, such as beer, ale or porter, containing one-half of one percent or more of alcohol draw a tax of $3 per barrel of 31 gallons. Last year, 1,940,537 gallons of malt liquor were seized.

These are a few examples. The law also provides special penalties, 50 percent of the amount of the tax for making false or fraudulent returns, and 25 percent for failing to make a return.

Some Crops in South Still Late, However, Due to Late Spring, Says Federal Reserve Report.

VALUE OF RETAIL SALES ALSO GAIN

Savings Deposits, Cash Reserves and Federal Reserve Notes for District Reported Greater.

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Agricultural conditions have shown seasonal progress during June and early July, although crops in some sections are still late, due to the cold, late spring, the monthly business review for July issued by the Federal Reserve bank here showed. The report was for the sixth federal reserve district, which includes Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi and Tennessee.

With the Georgia corn crop for this year estimated by the United States department of agriculture at 48,500,000 bushels, this crop will show a 164 percent increase over 1925, the federal reserve report showed. Wheat production in Georgia this year is estimated at 1,710,000 bushels from 114,000 acres, compared with 1,040,000 bushels produced on 90,000 acres in 1925. The tobacco acreage in Georgia this year is 24 percent smaller than last year, and the estimated production of tobacco is 35,114,000 pounds, as compared to a production of 48,030,000 pounds in 1925. The peanut acreage is 13 percent smaller than last year, with a corresponding falling off in pounds-production.

No Change in Florida.

In Florida the total amount of land in crops shows little change compared to last year. The acreages in corn and peanuts are smaller, but increases are reported in cotton, oats, hay and potatoes. Shade-grown tobacco shows a slight increase over last year, but tobacco, as a whole, shows a decrease, due to a smaller planting of bright tobacco. Conditions of staple crops still averages slightly below that of last year, but improved materially during June. The condition

ATLANTAN KILLED ON LINDALE ROAD

J. S. Smith, of 375 Wylie Street, Member of Power Firm Crew, Loses Life When Truck Overturns.

J. S. Smith, of 375 Wylie street, was almost instantly killed, and J. R. Wellborn, a co-worker with the Georgia Railway and Power company, suffered a fractured skull and other injuries when the truck in which they were riding to work was crowded off the road near Lindale, Ga., about 7 o'clock Saturday morning, and crashed down a 30-foot embankment, plowing Smith beneath it, according to statements from officials of the power company.

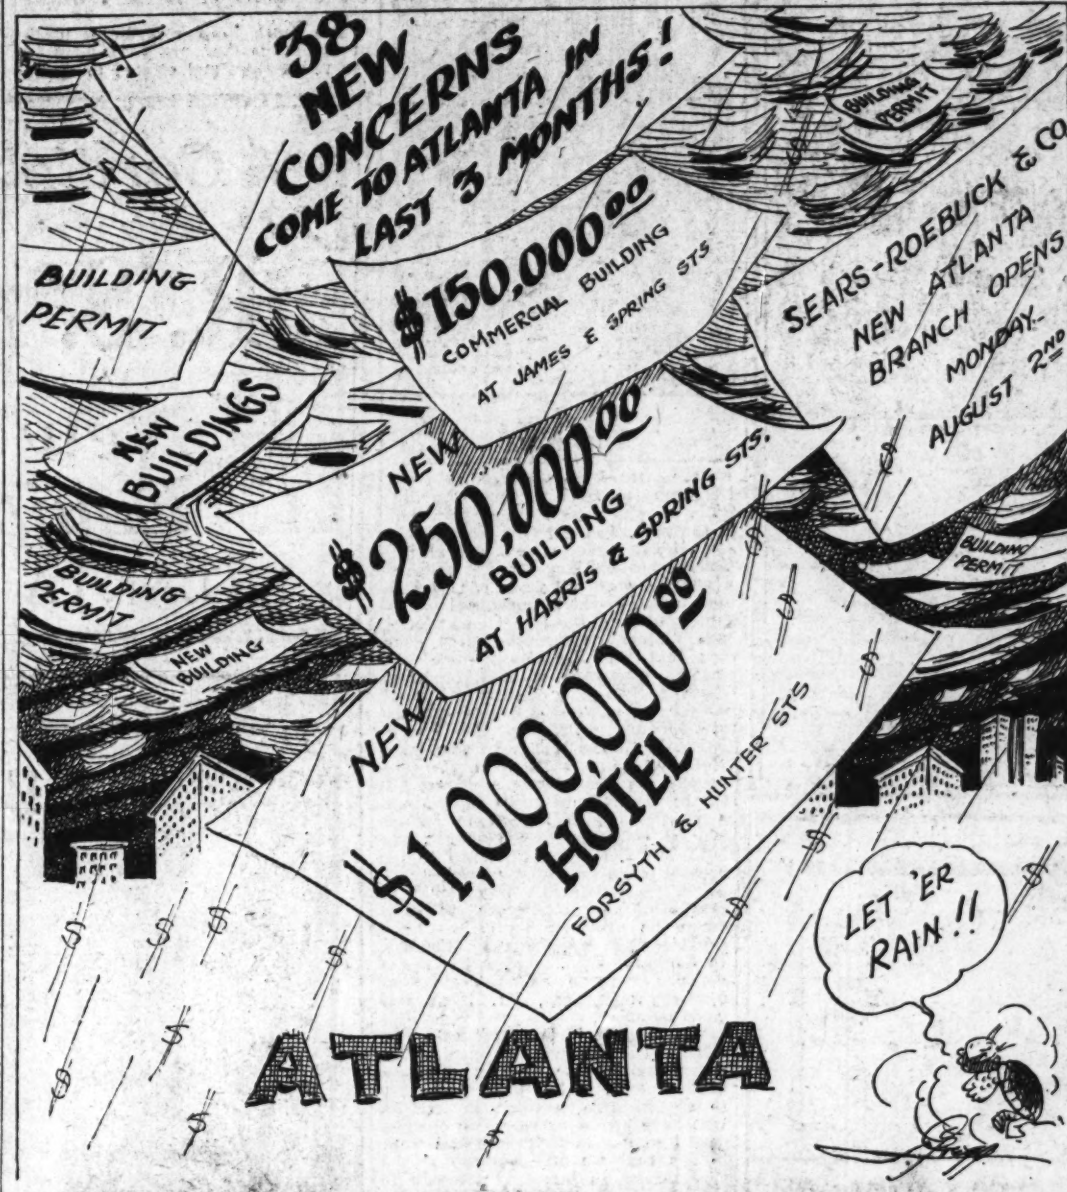

H. E. Burnham, who was riding on the running board of the vehicle, escaped injury by leaping from the falling machine. Burnham, Wellborn and Smith were in the power company's truck, with Smith driving, on their way from the hotel at Lindale to the power sub-station near there, when circling a curve overlooking a 30-foot embankment, Smith pulled over to avoid striking a truck coming from the opposite direction. Their machine lurched over the embankment, turned turtle and caught Smith beneath it, witnesses said.

It took 10 minutes to get Smith from under the truck, and he died almost immediately without regaining consciousness.

Smith was employed in the electric repair department of the power company, with whom he had worked for four years. He is survived by his widow and four children. Following the accident his body was taken to Britain Brothers, Lindale undertakers, and will be brought to Atlanta for interment.

Wellborn was carried to Harbor hospital at Rome, where it was stated he is suffering from a fractured skull and possibly internal injuries.

Republican Candidates Attack Granting of Charter; Renomination of Paulen, Curtis Seen.

Kansas City, July 31.—(AP)—A wet and dry fight in Missouri, a Ku Klux Klan issue in two state off-year races in Kansas and a big field of candidates but lack of state-wide issue in Oklahoma, characterize the primary elections to be held in these states August 3.

Prohibition holds the spotlight in the Missouri campaigns, both democratic and republican, for the United States senatorial nomination. George H. Williams, of St. Louis, present senator, who seeks both the short and long term republican nominations, has no definite pronouncement on the liquor issue. He said in his opening campaign speech that it was not an issue. Opposing him for the short term is Blodgett Priest, of St. Louis, running on a strictly wet platform.

For the long term Williams' opponents are Priest and David Proctor, of Kansas City, an avowed dry. On the democratic ticket, Congressman Harry B. Hawes, of St. Louis, a wet, seeks the senatorial nomination for both terms. Willis H. Meredith, of Popular Bluff, and Robert Y. Young of St. Joseph, oppose him for the short term, and Young and Judge Ewing Cockrell, of Warrensburg, for the long term. Cockrell and Meredith are out-and-out dries.

Klan Fight in Kansas.

What interest there is in the Kansas primary, the most listless in a decade, is engendered by the K. K. K. fight waged by two republican candidates for state offices, and by the attempt of former Governor Jonathan M. Davis, twice tried and acquitted on charges of pardon-selling, to win the democratic gubernatorial nomination.

Neither U. S. Senator Charles Curtis nor Governor Ben S. Paulen, republicans, has any real opposition for renomination.

William A. Smith, candidate for the nomination of attorney general, and Frank A. Ryan, seeking renomination for secretary of state, are the republicans who have injected the Klan issue into the primary. Both asked the voters to consider the primary a referendum on whether the K. K. K. of Georgia should be granted a lawful status in Kansas.

A huge ticket will confront Oklahoma voters at the polls, as more than 1,100 candidates are running for office. Sprinkled over the field are opponents of the teaching of evolution, prohibition and of the Ku Klux Klan.

NATION WILL PAY CUMMINS HONOR

Body To Lie in State Under Dome of Iowa Capitol Where He Began Public Service.

Des Moines, Iowa, July 31.—While tributes to the late Senator Albert B. Cummins continue to pour in from all parts of the nation, plans were being completed tonight for paying final honors to the veteran Iowa statesman who succumbed to a heart attack late Friday.

From 9 o'clock Sunday morning until 5 o'clock in the afternoon the body will lie in state under the golden dome of the state capitol, where he began his public services a quarter of a century ago.

Funeral services, which the family has announced will be public, will be held from the Cummins home at 4 o'clock Monday afternoon.

Plans for placing the late senator's body in state were made after Governor John Hammill had communicated with the family from Wyoming, where he is attending the governors' conference. Governor Hammill also issued instructions for arranging a military guard and escort for a state funeral. The governor will be represented at the services by Lieutenant Governor Clem F. Kimball.

Cummins' death, many of his friends believe, was hastened by his defeat for renomination in the primaries last June. Others, however, maintained that he had accepted the defeat with pleasure as he desired to retire into private life. Since his return from Washington, Cummins had been working enthusiastically on a book of memoirs.

Politics in Iowa were shunted aside today as leaders of both major parties joined in lauding and praising the late senator for his long career of public service.

Among the many messages of condolence which were delivered at the Cummins home was one from the Coolidge summer camp conveying the president's heartiest sympathy for the bereaved family.

CAMERON HELPS COOLIDGE BOOM FOR ANOTHER TERM

Arizona Senator Spends Week-End at White Pine Camp, Declaring West Is for Coolidge.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Paul Smith's, N. Y., July 31.—The booming of President Coolidge for renomination in 1928 continues.

Senator Cameron, republican, of Arizona, breezed in today to be a week-end guest of President and Mrs. Coolidge at White Pine camp. Upon reaching the executive office he promptly reinforced the utterances of Edsel Ford and Richard Washburn Child, predicting that there will be an overwhelming demand that the president accept another term.

"Speaking for myself, I am certain that no one can defeat President Coolidge for the nomination in 1928 if he should decide to run," Senator Cameron said. "People in the southwest are talking along that line, and connect his administration with the present prosperity and the lifting of the tax burden."

Not Third Term.

"The west does not consider that the nomination in 1928 would be a third term. He is now only serving his first elected term, and the people generally will so consider it and defy the third-term tradition talk that is being put out by the opposition."

"President Coolidge would get the delegates from Arizona and the entire west, except perhaps from one state, should a presidential possibility, now in the field, enter the contest. The trend is so strongly in favor of Mr. Coolidge for another four years that I doubt if any opposition develops against him. At present the receptive candidates are getting nowhere, and the people generally expect Mr. Coolidge to seek renomination."

"Will his opposition to the corn belt farm relief legislation work against President Coolidge?" the senator was asked.

"I do not believe so, judged by what the Iowa republican convention, in the heart of the corn belt, did in endorsing his administration," Cameron replied. "I believe that the farmers are willing to wait and see what can be done for them, rather than attempt to carry out any threat to destroy the republican party. In our section of the country the farmers and cattle growers have pretty well adjusted themselves to conditions, and there is no feeling against the administration or against."

GEORGIA TOBACCO MARKETS TO OPEN SALES ON TUESDAY

$10,000,000 Is Estimated Value of Crop; 43 Warehouses in 21 Cities To Have Buyers.

ACREAGE REDUCED, QUALITY BETTER

60 South Georgia Counties That Grow Bright Leaf Ready for Opening of Market August 3.

BY E. C. WESTBROOK,

Georgia State College of Agriculture.

Everything is in readiness for the opening of the Georgia tobacco markets which will take place Tuesday, August 3. The buyers, bookkeepers, ticket makers, and others of the selling force have been coming down from Virginia and the Carolinas for the last week. Tuesday morning will find about 20 Georgia markets ready to sell tobacco.

All of the markets that operated last year will operate this year, with the exception of the ones at Dublin, Albany and Lyons. It is not known definitely if the market at Hazlehurst will operate.

Many Markets Open.

Markets will be operated at Tifton, Blackshear, Douglas, Nashville, Valdosta, Hahira, Quitman, Thomasville, Cairo, Bainbridge, Camilla, Pelham, Moultrie, Fitzgerald, Waycross, Alma, Baxley, Vidalia, Metter and possibly Hazlehurst.

There will be two sets of buyers on five markets, Tifton, Blackshear, Douglas, Nashville and Valdosta.

There is much anticipation of what price tobacco will sell for this season. There is a general feeling of optimism. Georgia has a good crop of tobacco. The season has been more favorable than last year and most of the farmers have gotten good crops.

Most of the tobacco is bright-colored and of good quality. Last year some of the buyers complained that the tobacco leaf was too thick. This year the leaf is thinner and of fine texture. Part of this difference is due to more favorable growing season and part is due to a large number of the farmers growing lighter types of tobacco.

Other States Hit.

Tobacco in Virginia and the Carolinas has been injured by drought and it is expected there will be much demand for Georgia tobacco.

It also appears that the Chinese boycott of British goods which caused the British export companies to buy sparingly on the Georgia markets last year has been cleared up. This should strengthen the Georgia market.

Earlier in the season indications pointed to a 40,000,000-pound crop but it is doubtful if the crop will run much above 35,000,000 pounds, as compared with little less than 50,000,000 pounds last year. This together with the other factors mentioned should be reflected in a more favorable price for the Georgia crop this season. Approximately 45 percent of the crop has been housed.

Throughout approximately 60 counties in south Georgia preparations are being made by the tobacco growers for the opening of the sale of tobacco on August 3. This date is one week later than the markets opened last year, but it is regarded as advantageous inasmuch as it will allow the growers more time to get the tobacco housed and cured.

All through the tobacco belt the warehouses are ready to receive the miracle weed of south Georgia which has come to rank next to cotton in importance as a money crop in this section. Bright leaf tobacco has been grown in Georgia for nine years, but

GREAT STRUCTURE ON PONCE DE LEON AWAITS THROWS

Whole World Has Sent Merchandise for Shelves of Atlanta's Newest Retail Establishment.

BUILDING FINISHED ON SCHEDULE TIME

Nine Stories High, Store Is One of Most Impressive Buildings in Entire South.

Sears, Roebuck and company's store on Ponce de Leon avenue will open its doors Monday morning—the date set January 4 when the first spade of red clay was turned.

Rising nine stories on the site of Atlanta's old tourist camp and the once famous Ponce de Leon springs, the Sears-Roebuck building is one of the most impressive business structures in the entire south, a monument to progressive prosperity and faith in Atlanta.

Few believed that Sears, Roebuck and company would be ready for business in its Atlanta house at this early date. Only the most optimistic were credulous when the announcement was made. But the last brick has been laid, the final concrete has gone into the forms, the building is complete from basement to the tower's tip and the shelves are stocked.

This great Atlanta store is a most important link in the chain which extends from the Pacific to the Atlantic, Philadelphia on the east and Seattle on the west, with Chicago, Kansas City and Dallas in the middle west and southwest and now Atlanta.

I. H. Beall, who has been in Atlanta for some time, maintaining offices at the Sears-Roebuck store on Peachtree, will direct the destiny of the plant on Ponce de Leon. He will be aided by a trained corps of experts, products of the Sears-Roebuck system. Mr. Beall has been affiliated with Sears, Roebuck and company for 13 years and in January of this year, when it was definitely decided to make Atlanta the center of southern operations, he was commissioned manager of the store.

Silks from Japan and China, toys from the shops of Leipzig, lace from Switzerland, musical instruments from Italy and Germany, precious gems from the diamond mines of South Africa and numerous articles made here in America are found on the shelves of the great Sears-Roebuck building.

Much of the goods that Atlantans will see Monday was contributed by the south. These include cotton goods of every description, towels and towelings, blankets, underwear and hosiery, work clothing, photographs, and pianos, automobiles oils and accessories—countless articles and commodities which were manufactured and produced in the same territory which Sears-Roebuck will serve through its mail order division.

The retail division is comparatively new, having originated in 1924. It is under the direction of General R. E. Wood, formerly of the United States army, and now vice president of the company. The first retail store was opened on the west side in Chicago in the merchandise building of the Chicago store. The retail store in the Atlanta building is declared by officials to be the best and most completely equipped and stocked department in the entire chain.

The Sears-Roebuck building stands 235 feet high, surmounted by a flag pole running 60 feet higher. The main building is 140 feet wide and 440 feet long. It is ventilated by 14 fan systems, which are connected by 250,000 pounds of sheet metal. The sprinkling system contains 75,000 feet of piping and 50,000 feet of additional piping has gone in the plumbing and heating system. There are 200 telephones, of which 155 are automatic. The total floor space of the Atlanta store is 750,000 feet.

Torture Victim Reveals "INQUISITOR" BELIEVED DEMENTED Five Hours of Horror

St. Paul, Minn., July 31.—A story of five hours of horror, while he was tortured with all the mercilessness of an old Spanish Inquisition, in the home of Walter H. Fletcher, a manufacturer, was related to police today by Edward Horrigan, a city fireman.

Lured to the Fletcher home by a ruse, Horrigan said he was put in a straight jacket, handcuffed to a chair, and then tortured by Fletcher, with fire, whip-lashes, fist blows and other cruelties while a youth stood guard over him with a rifle.

A daily hearing is being sought for Fletcher, whom police said admitted torturing the fireman to make him "an object-lesson to those men who think they can play around with other men's wives."

Horrigan was rescued by police after having been kept in a straight jacket for five hours. He was taken to the hospital, but was released after treatment.

"I don't know exactly what happened because I fainted three times," Horrigan said. "Fletcher had a razor blade but I don't think he used them on me. He pinched me with silver, but not what his finger nails were. He was cruel and then he had lighted matches to my skin."

Ray Klemmrich, 18-year-old youth employed by Fletcher, said he had been ordered by Fletcher to stand guard over the victim because Fletcher had threatened him with a razor blade. He said he probably would have been killed.

WHY THE HEN CACKLES

When a hen lays an egg she indulges in a short period of cackling; it is her method of advertising to the world that she has produced some food for mankind, and that it is now ready for use.

When a dealer is prepared to supply the demands of a community with any commodity he advertises it in the morning newspaper where it will be seen and read by the most people of that community.

It is conceded that more people have more time to read on Sunday than any other day of the week, hence the large number of advertisements to be found in Sunday's Constitution.

No matter what you may need or desire, you will find it advertised in today's Constitution, and priced right. Read these advertisements carefully. Personal selection of the article is more satisfactory after you have canvassed the matter thoroughly through reading the advertisements.

University Summer School Attendance Breaks All Records

Athens, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)—With the largest enrollment in its history, the University of Georgia summer school has representatives from all but 11 of the 161 Georgia counties. Dr. J. S. Stewart, director, announces. The total enrollment when the school closed its fifth week of the 1926 session was over 1,900, and it is expected when the nine weeks' course ends it will exceed 2,000. Many interesting special conferences have been held this year, among them the annual superintendents' week.

women's club week, grand opera week and the vocational teachers' meeting. The six weeks' session closed Saturday. There are 76 students from other states, including South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, North Carolina, New York, District of Columbia, Tennessee, Virginia, Massachusetts, Ohio, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Rhode Island, Texas and Brazil.

Former Educator Heads Local Branch Of Sears-Roebuck

L. H. Beall, the manager of the Atlanta store, has run the complete gamut of mail order administration. For years previous to coming to Sears, Roebuck and company, Mr. Beall was engaged in educational work. After being graduated from Denison university, at Granville, Ohio, he was a high school principal in the west. The last five years of his educational career were spent at the Kansas State College of Agriculture, where he was professor of English literature, in which capacity he was associated with the late Henry Jackson Waters, eminent journalist. During that time he also became intimately connected with William M. Jardine, then dean of the agricultural school and at present secretary of agriculture under President Coolidge.

Mr. Beall has been with the Sears, Roebuck company 13 years. He commenced his activities as a correspondent in the returned goods department, a position which he left to become general correspondence manager. In 1921 Mr. Beall was promoted to the general management of all collections. Three years later he was placed in charge of the inter-store relations where he executed his offices in a capable and commendatory manner. In January, 1926, when Atlanta was definitely chosen as the center of southern operations, Mr. Beall was made manager.

"I am glad it is over," said Mr. Beall. "The date of our opening has never been in question, but it was a difficult task. It has been a pleasure to cooperate with those in Atlanta who have helped us meet our opening dead line, and in reciprocity I want to say that we are going to return that service in increased measure to everyone in the territory. I sincerely hope that all our friends can arrange to be our guests at the opening tomorrow."

Bartow Mineral Exhibit Awarded Prize at Show

Cartersville, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)—Professor P. W. Barnard, principal of the Stilesboro school, has just returned from the summer school session of the Seventh District A. & M. school at Powder Springs, and reports that the Bartow county mineral exhibit took first prize over similar exhibits from 16 other counties in north-west Georgia.

In presenting this county's claims before the judges, Professor Barnard said: "Bartow county grows wheat, oats, rice, corn, both sweet and Irish potatoes; all the vegetables that can be grown anywhere in Georgia; of the hay crops we have vetch, alfalfa, soy beans and the common clover crops."

"The area of Bartow county is about 27 miles square, and geologists claim there is no place of equal area in the world that has as many mineral products in quantities. Bartow has gold—mined in small quantities; bauxite, from which we get aluminum and alum; shale, from which we get potash, brick and tile."

"Slate, from which we get roofing; lime rock, from which we ship 1,200 tons monthly; 1,000 tons of asphalt filler monthly; 1,750 tons of 1-inch crushed stone; 8,000 tons of 1-inch crushed stone; 1,800 tons of hydrated lime; 1,000 tons of agricultural lime; 200 tons of plaster—a total of nearly 15,000 tons monthly."

"In addition, we have magnesia, from which we get epsom salts; iron ore, thousands of carloads yearly, manganese, shipped by the hundreds of tons to the steel centers; ochre, shipped in carloads and trainloads, used in making paints and linoleum; graphite, kaolin, and barytes, one of the most valuable of all minerals, used in the manufacture of paints and automobile tires."

CHARITY TO GET HALF OF ESTATE OF JOSEPH TRINZ

Chicago, July 31.—(AP)—Charity will receive nearly half of the $540,000 estate of Joseph Trinz, motion picture magnate, under the terms of the will admitted to probate today. Mr. Trinz died a week ago today. A score of bequests to relatives total $300,000.

Ships From the Seven Seas Bring Goods of Whole World For Sears, Roebuck Customers

Southland Contributes Heavily of Cotton Goods of Every Description to Big Mail Order House.

"The ships that sail the seven seas" bring goods that eventually find their way to the shelves of the magnificent Sears-Roebuck building on Ponce de Leon avenue.

Silks that have their origin in Japan and China, toys from the shops at Leipzig, lace from Switzerland, perfumes from Paris, linens woven in the bonnie braves of Scotland, or by the lakes which have made the Elberfeld famous in song and lore, precious gems from the diamond mines of South Africa, gloves for milady that have their origin in the Rue de la Paix, pipes for the men made in old Vienna, violins, accordions and other musical instruments from Italy and Germany—and thousands upon thousands of articles made here in America, all these are available to the customers of Atlanta's newest store.

The south itself contributes much of the goods that are on display in the retail store and offered to customers. A partial list of the lines of merchandise made and purchased in the south includes a complete assortment of cotton goods of every description, towels and toweling, blankets, underwear and hosiery, work clothing, housewears, shoes, tents and awnings, phonographs and pianos, candles, furniture and mattresses, automobile accessories and oils, harness and farm implements, plumbing and heating supplies.

And back of every article sold by this great store is a complete guarantee of satisfaction and fair dealing; a guarantee made possible because of the high quality of the goods offered for sale. Laboratory analysis, the testing of merchandise for strength, durability and wear, enables this great institution to stand solidly behind its goods, according to its officials.

Manufacturers the world over are familiar with the quality demanded by the buyers for this institution. Rigid inspection upon the delivery of the goods insures the performance of the guarantee.

Dealing as they do with more than 10,000,000 families in all parts of the country, or about one family out of every three, this concern has become noted for the high quality of its merchandise. In its catalog, Sears, Roebuck & Co. says: "We will not sell merchandise that cannot be honestly guaranteed to give full and complete satisfaction."

Mercer Law School Adds Faculty Member For Fall Session

Macon, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)—Paul W. Brosman, for the past two years professor of law at the University of Indiana, will become professor of contractual subjects in the Mercer University law school during the coming year, according to an announcement of Dr. Rufus C. Harris, dean of the school.

Professor Brosman is added to the Mercer law school faculty, making a total now of five full-time professors in the school. The expansion program of the law school as adopted by the Mercer trustees called for the addition of two full-time professors, making the total five instead of three.

The new Mercer professor comes from the faculty of the University of Indiana. He received the bachelor of arts degree from the Indiana university and his law degree from the University of Illinois. While at Illinois he was an assistant in the law department.

After receiving his degree he went to Albion, Ill., where he was engaged in active bar practice for two years.

The five full-time professors in the law school when it opens for the fall term in September will be: Judge William H. Fish, dean emeritus; Dr.

Rufus C. Harris, dean; Dr. D. K. Keckner, librarian and instructor; A. McClain and Paul W. Brosman, professors.

Farm Club Members To Be Guests Soon Of Sparta Barbecue

Sparta, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)—Elaborate preparations are being made for the Farm Club barbecue which will be served to all of the club members, boys and girls, in Hahcock county by County Agent S. D. Truitt on Friday, August 6, at Rocker's meadow, near this city.

The county agent has invited each of the club members to be present on that day, when they will hear speeches by prominent educators from the State College of Agriculture just before the monster dinner is served.

The club members in the county, more than three hundred in number, are doing excellent work this year, according to the county agent, and deserve the barbecue which will be served them next week.

The club members have the best prospects for a bountiful harvest that they have had in several years.

Tokio school children are taught to operate automatic telephones by portable systems placed in the public schools.

GIGANTIC RETAILING ORGANIZATION OF TODAY IS RESULT OF IDEA BORN IN EARLY NINETIES

TWO YOUTHS Sired IDEA WHICH TODAY SERVES MILLIONS

Richard W. Sears and A. C. Roebuck Had Courage To Back Novel Conception With Work.

The gigantic business of Sears, Roebuck & Co., which serves more than 9,000,000 families today, is the result of an idea which originated in the minds of two young men years ago. They were Richard W. Sears and A. C. Roebuck, and they began their first operations in the early 90's under the name of A. C. Roebuck & Co. Sears at that time was at the head of the R. W. Sears Watch company, and Roebuck was in charge of his assembling, timing and repairing department. The business was sold and the two opened a mail-order house in Minneapolis on a small scale. The successful result of their idea and their early efforts is best realized with a trip through the mammoth plant on Ponce de Leon avenue.

Richard W. Sears, the founder of the great institution which bears his name, was born in 1868 in a small village near Mankato, Minn. His father, a pioneer of English ancestry, was the village blacksmith and wagon maker.

Money Lost.

The elder Mr. Sears, by dint of much hard work and steady saving, amassed a considerable fortune and his family enjoyed all the comforts which the crude frontier community afforded.

At this time a change came in the family fortunes, which were destined to have a marked effect on young Sears' later life. All of the money which Mr. Sears had saved was invested in a stock farm enterprise which failed to mature and Richard was compelled to quit school and help shoulder the burden of supporting the family.

He went to Minneapolis, where he obtained employment in the head office of the Minneapolis and St. Louis railroad. His progress was slow at first, a fact which the youthful mind was quick to recognize. He asked for and was granted a transfer to a smaller town—North Redwood, Minn., the railroad station for Redwood Falls. It was in this small hamlet that his career really started.

Started Lumber Yard.

Redwood Falls in these early days was almost an outpost of civilization, and barter with the Indians was one of the chief occupations. It was Sears' duty as station agent to dispatch two trains daily, one in each direction. This operation consumed so little of his working day that he cast about to find some other business to occupy his time. The station was in the heart of the timber country, and he turned his efforts to the establishment of a wood and lumber yard. In addition to this, he traded with the Indians, from whom he bought venison, berries and other articles which they sold.

Then came the turn in his affairs which was finally to bring about the gigantic institution which exists today. A shipment of watches to the local dealer was refused. Young Sears asked permission to sell these watches and his request was granted. After his day's work in the station he wrote letters to his friends in the railroad service offering the watches at a low price. The watches were good and his friends were his best advertisers. He ordered more watches and quickly sold them. He cast everything aside but the watch business and it grew by leaps and bounds.

Rebuilt Family Fortunes.

When still in his teens he disposed of his interests. With $10,000 he reestablished the family fortunes, he went to Iowa to take up the life of a country banker. But such an alert mind and active body could not be reconciled to a life of comparative ease. He heeded the call of the mail order business and went back to it on a bigger scale than ever before. With a supreme confidence in human nature and a belief that every man was honest, Sears announced a guarantee for his goods that astounded the business world. Veteran merchants assured him that his plan would spell his financial ruin, but the young man would not be shaken. He plunged everything on his faith and his judgment was vindicated. The idea "took" and today finds ten millions of customers still buying under the same plan.

Mr. Sears was always the heart and soul of his own business. His tireless energy prompted him to buy the merchandise and then write the literature which was to sell it. He selected only those articles of merchandise which represented good values, and then told the truth about them.

Through all these years of expansion the increasing business demanded larger and larger quarters, and he lived to see the business which started in the corner of a small railroad station in the woods of Minnesota occupy every inch of space in the largest building in the world.

Sidelights of Life. There are many little sidelights on the life of Richard Sears which, if compiled, would make an interesting novel. Chief among these is the story of the beginning of his separator business. With a party of friends he was engaged in a hunting expedition when night overtook the party. Seeking shelter in a farmhouse, they were allowed to sleep in the barn. On arising the next morning he was met by a contraption that he had never seen before. An inquiry disclosed it to be a cream separator, which sold for $150. "Boys," he said, "there is no reason why that device could not be put in the farmer's hands for $50. I can see that it will revolutionize the dairy business and I am going to do it." He went back to Chicago to do it and he did. The success of the "economy king" was instant and lasting.

And so he was in all his undertakings. Keen of mind, indefatigable in energy, honest in himself and with faith in his fellow men, the business kept growing and growing. To indicate his unusual vision he saw years ago that the southeast was destined to grow and he bought heavily in east cotton belt property. Much of this property remains in the hands of his family today.

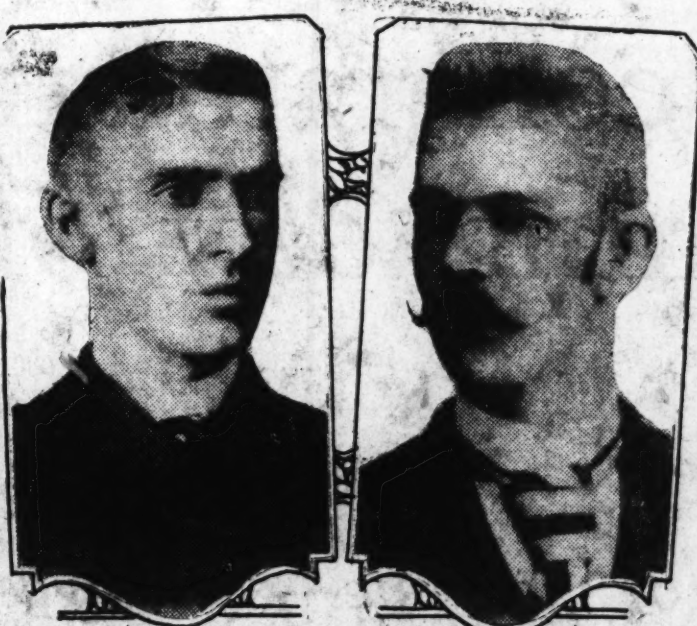

Roebuck's Connection.

A. C. Roebuck, one of the founders of Sears, Roebuck & Co., was associated with Mr. Sears for a number of years in the early days of the firm. He learned watch-making and engraving in his youth. His first position was in Hammond, Ind. A few years later he secured a position with Mr. Sears, then at the head of the Sears Watch company, in Chicago, and took charge of the watch assembling, timing and repairing.

After Mr. Sears sold the business, he and Mr. Roebuck formed a corporation and began a mail order business, the idea for which was born in Mr. Sears' fertile brain. They named this business A. C. Roebuck & Co., and established headquarters at Minneapolis. Shortly afterwards the name was changed to Sears, Roebuck & Co., and in 1895 the business was removed to Chicago, where Mr. Roebuck in the same year sold out his interests in the firm and went into a separate business for himself.

Mr. Roebuck was engaged in active business in Chicago until the fall of 1924. He now makes his home in Florida.

Sears-Roebuck Building Monument of Atlanta Speed

The last brick has been laid, the final concrete has gone into the form, and the mammoth Sears-Roebuck building, at the corner of Glen Iris drive and Ponce de Leon avenue is completed.

On January 4, 1926, the first spade was turned and on that date August 2 was set as the completing date. Two thousand Atlanta workmen have put their best efforts into the work, for which they have received in salaries totaling more than $2,000,000.

The edifice is 232 feet high and will be surmounted by a flag pole running 90 feet into the air. The main building is 140 feet wide, and 440 feet long. It is ventilated by 14 fan systems, which are connected by 250,000 pounds of sheet metal. The sprinkling system contains 75,000 feet of piping and 80,000 feet of additional piping have gone into the plumbing and heating. There are 208 telephones of which 155 are automatic. The shipping room, which is the largest single room that Sears, Roebuck and company have ever built under one roof is equipped to handle business in a great volume. The unloading platform will handle 16 cars of merchandise at one time and 300,000 separate packages can be handled under normal operation.

The partitions running between and separating the various departments and offices are more than a mile in length and the total lineal feet of casework is 11-1/4 miles.

The clerical department will use 160 typewriters, 160 adding machines and 100 billing machines, in handling the correspondence and records of the institution.

The postage for the year beginning August 1 has been estimated at $350,000. It is only when one considers these figures as separate items that one realizes the enormity of such an undertaking. It has been completed and on schedule, establishing in Atlanta a new record for construction from the standpoint of both volume and speed.

THE ATLANTA ENVELOPE COMPANY —largest manufacturer of COMMERCIAL envelopes exclusively in the South—takes genuine pleasure in adding its voice to the chorus of welcome to the Officers and Members of the Sears, Roebuck organization on their arrival in Atlanta.

605-511 Stewart Avenue, Atlanta, Ga. 3370

VICE PRESIDENT HERE FOR OPENING

R. E. Wood, vice president of Sears, Roebuck and company, and in charge of that company's retail stores, now nine in number, and all of its manufacturing operations, is one of the executives who has come on from Chicago to be present at the opening tomorrow morning.

General Wood, as he is known to many Atlantans, is a southerner by adoption, having married a Georgia girl, Miss Mary Hardwick, of Augusta.

After his graduation from West Point, in 1900, he served in various capacities and at various posts throughout this country and its possessions until he retired with the rank of major, July 1, 1915, to become assistant to the director general of the smokeless powder division of the DuPont Powder company at Wilmington, Delaware.

As soon as it became apparent that we were to be engaged in the world war he again offered his services to his country. He was general purchasing officer of the emergency fleet corporation until assigned to the Fort-second division in France at Chaumont on the general staff. Later he was director of army transport service, returning to America in 1918 to become brigadier general and acting quartermaster general until his discharge at the close of the war.

One of the outstanding achievements of General Wood's army career was the construction of the Panama railroad. He was also the chief quartermaster at Panama, having served with the Isthmian Canal commission from 1905 until his retirement from service in 1915.

Radio Announcers Flattering.

The American reading audience is becoming critical. Let a broadcasting announcer split an infinitive or mis-accent the name of an Italian operetta or pronounce Gilla Greco's first name in the other way, and he receives a deluge of protesting epistles from radio fans.

"It's a hard life," says Romy, the noted radio announcer, who tells in the August McClure's of being severely called to task by hailing the performance of a soprano with "Bravo." "Brava," his protesting correspondent advised him, is the correct encouragement for a female artist.

100 pages. Today it would be classed as an uninteresting and inefficient piece of sales merchandise. It was printed on white paper with black ink, sprinkled here and there with small illustrations reproduced from hand carved wood cuts. The present book which for the first time bears the address of Atlanta, Georgia, is the work of hundreds of artists, photographers, engravers and printers. Among the great strides of recent years in the printing industry, is the ability of the creators of this catalog, to reproduce with amazing accuracy the color and texture of the merchandise the printed page represents. Recently photography has stepped into the limelight in catalog production, and the number of photographs taken of the actual merchandise worn by live models increases with every issue. This service is of particular interest to people who are anxious to see how the article they are to buy looks on a living model.

In the general catalog there are approximately 350,000 separate items, covering practically everything known to man. It has been facetiously remarked that Sears, Roebuck and company sold everything but live stock and that in the form of dried beef, in ham and bacon. The "big book" as the general catalog is called, uses ink and paper for the thousands of tons and the distribution will run about 10,000,000 copies annually. The book is not entirely mailed from the place where it is printed but is shipped in carload lots to various points throughout the territory from which it is mailed to customers in all parts of the country.

Large Sears, Roebuck Catalog Had Its Beginning as Short Personal Letter by Founder

There is little to compare between the little circular that told the story which Richard Sears wrote himself in the early days, and the catalog which describes and illustrates the merchandise which Sears, Roebuck and company sells today.

The entire institution started with a letter and an idea. The letter has given place to a book which brings into play every provision and short cut known to the printing art. The solitary composer of the original letter has given way to a staff of editors and copy writers who devote six months twice each year to the semi-annual general catalogs. The idea alone remains, it is the foundation on which the business is built.

The first catalog numbered about

We Are Proud of the Part We Played in the Building of Sears, Roebuck & Co.

—and heartily greet this great organization on its grand opening—tomorrow, August 2nd. Our service in the upbuilding of this great store included the making of new parts for concrete towers which were needed to carry larger loads at a quicker rate of speed.

Further duties to which our engineers were detailed, were the welding and repairing of concrete mixers and machinery, also the changing and moving of much of it to most advantageous positions.

Officials of Sears-Roebuck Farm Foundation Tour South To Study Country's Problems

Mail Order Agricultural Bureau Planned To Supply Customers With Complete Market Data.

Samuel R. Guard, director of the Sears-Roebuck agricultural foundation, and Edward J. Condon, secretary, have been in Atlanta for several days, busy organizing a corps of experts to function as the mail order farm bureau of the southeast.

Mr. Guard and Mr. Condon drove to Atlanta from Chicago, and have already studied and inspected most of the southeastern country. They have visited three of the agricultural colleges to confer with the authorities there, and expect to visit two more this week. All along the route through Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, they have interviewed growers, and taken a first-hand survey of the south's agricultural problems. Announcements of the development of the work of the agricultural foundation will be made as soon as the organization is perfected.

Reviewing the impressions of his tour through the southeast Mr. Guard declares that this part of the country is fortunate in comparison with many other sections. "Despite the effect of the drought in parts of the Piedmont," said Mr. Guard, "we believe that the recent rains will still bring a fair yield of cotton. The corn looks good, and even in the dryest spots the farmers refuse to be downhearted.

"I am deeply impressed by the wonderful crops of peaches and watermelons. It seems a pity that the growers of the southeast have not unitedly made arrangements to market their perishables in an orderly way. Right here looms one of your greatest problems, and we hope to be able to assist as an organizing factor in this territory.

"What you have accomplished with tobacco as a money crop commands admiration. We anticipate a lively opening at the tobacco auctions next week.

"The world's largest store, which so munificently supports our far-flung agricultural extension work, is the largest consumer of cotton lint in the world. We, therefore, expect to interest ourselves largely in cotton culture and marketing. Our Atlanta and Dallas offices will join in a south-wide cotton demonstration of spectacular possibilities.

"Our organization is primarily economic in its function, though from the beginning we expect to render a helpful social service, when we take into the farm home of the south the best the world affords in music, education and entertainment. But our greatest service is along marketing lines. We are informers. We expect to keep our people in close and understanding touch with the market trends of what they have to sell. We think that the grower is entitled to know as much about the supply and demand for his product as the buyer. In this field we can

Experts Speed Sears-Roebuck Mail Orders

Mailing room of Atlanta plant of Sears, Roebuck and company, where thousands of orders are handled daily.

One of the outstanding accomplishments of the Sears, Roebuck company is the efficacy with which the organization handles its enormous volume of business.

When the mail is received in the plant the sacks are weighed and the orders therein approximated. Long experience has advanced this process to the stage where the estimation is almost perfect.

The mail is automatically opened at the rate of 500 a minute. Girls, expert at handling correspondence, remove the checks and money orders after comparing the amounts against the amounts on the orders. New orders or tickets are then made out, there being a separate ticket for each merchandise department specified on the original order.

These tickets are released to all the merchandise departments concerned at the same time. The tickets arrive at the various departments simultaneously and are filled immediately on a prearranged schedule. Following this same schedule closely the merchandise from the different departments arrives in the shipping room at about the same time and the entire order is carefully packed for shipment.

The postoffice department maintains a staff of experts right in the building who sort and sack the mail so that it is ready for shipment when it leaves the plant.

Frequently during a busy season this institution will handle as many as 200,000 orders, and it is only when one considers the negligible number of errors made, that the efficiency of the system is fully realized.

Congratulating Sears, Roebuck & Company Atlanta—and the Southeast

GREETINGS TO SEARS, ROEBUCK & COMPANY, on the opening of their magnificent establishment in Atlanta. The remarkable executive genius displayed in planning it, erecting it, and stocking it with merchandise in so short a time merits sincerest commendation; the finished store itself is a distinct credit to the firm of Sears, Roebuck and Company, to Atlanta, and to the Southeast.

For the decision by a firm of the breadth and scope of Sears, Roebuck and Company to locate a store here is striking evidence of the widespread recognition of the Southeast's present and future economic importance, and of Atlanta's indisputable position as the commercial center of this richly endowed and rapidly expanding section.

So the establishment of the Sears, Roebuck and Company store in Atlanta is more than a significant step in the unmistakable era of development and advancement which the Southeast is now experiencing—it is an expression of faith in the Southeast which cannot fail to strengthen the Southeast's faith in itself, and further quicken the whole section's growth and sound progress.

Congratulations, then, all round—to Sears, Roebuck and Company, to Atlanta, to the Southeast.

From its first store in Chicago, five stories in height, with about 25,000 feet of floor space, to its present nine-story store in six cities, with a combined floor space in excess of 6,000,000 square feet is the record of 30 years of progress. The Chicago store, the parent house of the great institution, was erected in

Here are housed the executive offices, the gigantic printing establishment, the wall paper and paint factories, the tent and awning factories, as well as the merchandise building which handles the orders from customers in the middle west. The Philadelphia store, on Roosevelt boulevard, is the second largest store in the group. From this store are served those customers who live in New England and in other eastern states.

IN THE CONTRACTING BUSINESS
IN ATLANTA FOR 22 YEARS

When Trip Hammers Chatter Night and Day and Steel and Mortar Mount the Sky

... There's a Silent Servant that Speeds Ahead
the Rush of Atlanta's Progress

ALL the South has been amazed at the tremendous speed with which the new Atlanta store of Sears, Roebuck and Company has been reared to its dominant place in the city's ever-growing skyline.

During the daylight hours, passersby have marvelled at the vigorous activity, the surging, business-like aggressiveness with which the gigantic pile of masonry has raised itself above Ponce de Leon Avenue and surrounding slopes.

Derricks lifting giant girders, elevators slipping swiftly upward with loads of brick and mortar, trip-hammers sounding their staccato song, powerful hoisting machines bearing stupendous burdens—all mechanical Titans, operating harmoniously and smoothly to finish an enormous job.

And at night—never slackening, the work went on, while searchlights brought daylight to the scene and doubled the hours of work to make this progress unceasing.

Practically every piece of machinery was electrically operated—there was no gasoline equipment and only one steam engine on the job!

This is the same tireless, eager servant that serves you in your office and in your home and stands ready to perform any task you assign it—from lighting the tiny lamp in the surgeon's hand to turning the ponderous wheels of industry!

The completed Sears, Roebuck and Company plant will use electric power supplied by this Company for lighting and for power in operating elevators, fans, ventilators and for many other purposes.

Let These Engineers Tell You!

L. B. de Witt, superintendent for the architects, who, with C. A. Driver, general superintendent of the B. W. Construction Company, is in charge of the work, said:

"The power service furnished by the Georgia Railway and Power Company has been extremely satisfactory in every respect. It was exactly the kind of service that was essential in permitting us to make the construction record that we have, and we have been given the finest kind of cooperation by the Power Company."

Mr. Driver said:

"It was only by the fullest cooperation of every one concerned that we were able to keep up with our schedules, and in some cases to complete work ahead of the dates originally set. The Georgia Railway and Power Company's assistance was an important factor because of the fact that our hoisting machines, derricks, cranes, elevators and practically all other machinery, were electrically operated. We used no gasoline-driven equipment and only one steam engine on the job. The power and light service has been entirely satisfactory in every way."

This is of especial significance, in view of the fact that at all its other stores except in Seattle, this company maintains its own private electric generating plants: in Chicago, in Kansas City, in Philadelphia and in Dallas.

Another unquestioned tribute to the service rendered here!

Elkin H. Powell Directs Sears-Roebuck Advertising

Elkin H. Powell, advertising manager of Sears, Roebuck and company, will arrive in Atlanta tomorrow morning to attend the opening of the Atlanta plant.

Atlanta and Mr. Powell are anything but strangers as he spent much time in visiting and studying the Atlanta territory long before the decision to build here was made public. In conducting the advertising department of the world's largest store, Mr. Powell administers what is probably the most outstanding advertising effort in the country.

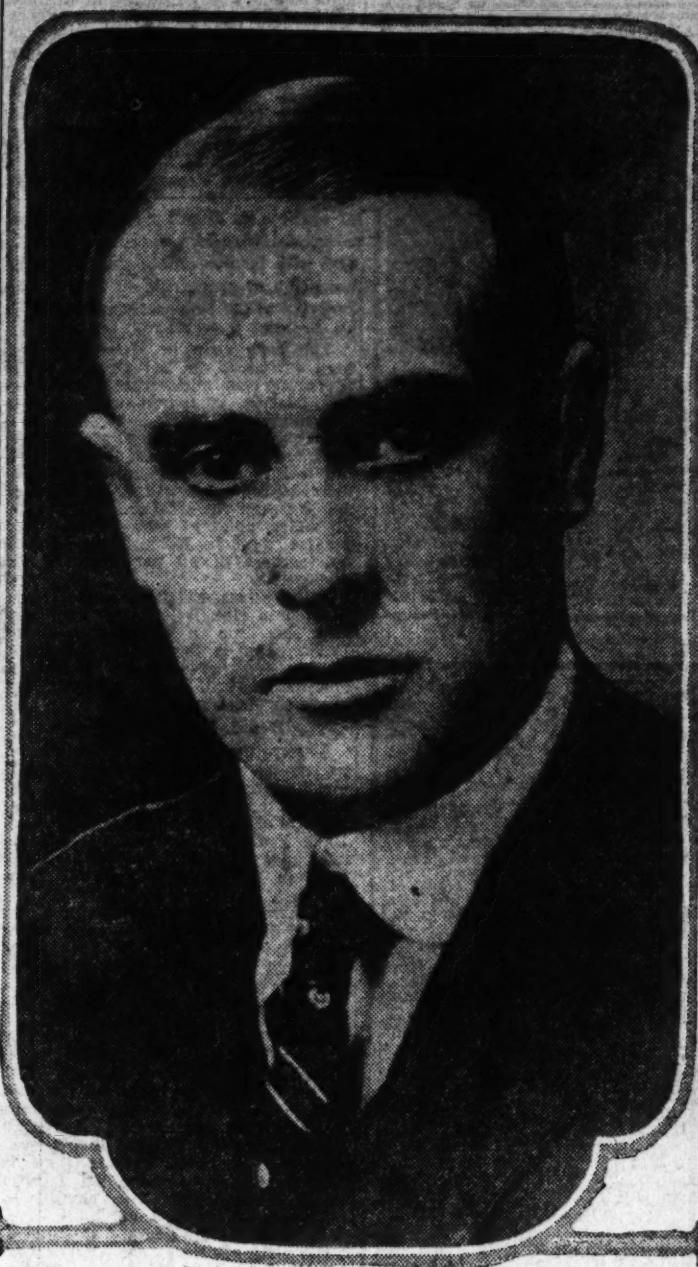

The advertising of Sears, Roebuck and company is its entire voice, and is directly responsible for the enormous volume of business done annually. Mr. Powell superintends the compilation, printing and distribution of the "Gift Book of the Nation," as the Sears-Roebuck catalog is frequently designated. This book contains 35,000 separate articles, the great majority of which are completely illustrated, and constitutes one of the biggest single printing jobs in the world. "Atlanta is the ideal spot," said Mr. Powell in a recent interview. "Stand-

JAPANESE STEAMER REPORTED IN DISTRESS

Cordova, Alaska, July 31.—(AP)—A wireless from the United States naval radio station at Dutch Harbor in the Aleutian islands, said today the Japanese steamer Yonan Maru was in distress in the North Pacific ocean, on its way to Portland, Ore., from Muroran.

An intercepted message from the Yonan Maru to the Siberia Maru said: "Our shaft is broken in stern. Laying to. Want to get Yogan Maru so please inform of SOS." The Yonan Maru was reported 1,200 miles off from Stevan, B. C., with no Powell in a recent interview. "Stand-

President of Sears-Roebuck Merchandise Head Started in Life as Water Boy Of Sears - Roebuck With Firm 15 Years

C. M. KITTLE.

C. M. Kittle, president Sears, Roebuck and company, also is a southern sop. He was born October 9, 1880, or a farm near Elkins, W. Va. Mr. Kittle's business experience, while short when the importance of his position is considered, has been crammed with activity. He started at the foot of the hill, beginning as water boy for a railroad section gang. He later became statement clerk for the old West Virginia Central & Pittsburgh railroad, which he left to become associated with the Illinois Central system. He gradually worked his way up through important executive positions to senior vice president in charge of all activities.

During the war period he served as federal manager of the Illinois Central, the New Orleans Great Northern, the Mississippi Central and the Gulf & Ship Island railroads.

After this successful career in the railroad business he was elected president of Sears, Roebuck and company—"the world's largest store." The remarkable coincidences connected with Mr. Kittle's election lies in the fact that both the founder of this great institution, Mr. Richard Sears, and its chief executive, C. M. Kittle, received their early training in the railroad industry.

every branch of mail order handling department, his course of training dating back 13 years.

After years of training he was placed in charge of the parcel post division. From this position he was given complete control of all handling activities, which included parcel post, trucking operations and freight movements.

He has always been vitally interested in the personnel of his institution and has to a considerable extent "personalized" the mail order business. "When I came to Atlanta," stated Mr. Woods, "I thought that the problem of personnel would be a serious one. On the contrary I have found it to be very interesting and gratifying in the extreme. The employees here have sensed our plan with amazing suddenness and the whole machinery I am sure will run in a highly efficient manner. Their efficiency I am sure will be immediately reflected in our service when we get under way."

Mr. Woods and his wife and two daughters, who are likewise strong boosters for Atlanta and its people, have been living in Atlanta for the past two months.

the business in several sections of the country since that time.

Mr. Cook came to Sears, Roebuck & Co., from Marshall Field and for years specialized in the furniture business. In September, of 1920, he went to Philadelphia to become manager of the furniture department at that point. In 1923 he left Philadelphia for Chicago, where he continued to serve in the furniture department.

He returned east in April of 1925 and assumed the managerial responsibility of the New York office. This is the general buying office of the entire Sears-Roebuck organization and it was this position that Mr. Cook held until his transfer to Atlanta.

Mr. Cook is not a stranger to the southland. His forebears came from the south and it was in this part of the country that he received his military training and army commission. He has long been associated

Course of Storm May Be Forecast By Radio Compass

Washington, July 31.—Prediction of the course of a hurricane as that which swept up the Atlantic coast this week may become possible as the result of experiments naval experts made with the radio compass in the storm area.

If the course of such tropical storms which are frequent were known in advance, the loss of life and damage to property which they have caused herebefore could be prevented.

The exact path of the recent Caribbean disturbance was plotted by Lieutenant E. H. Kincaid, navigator of the navy transport Klittery, which was en route from Port Au Prince, Haiti, to St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, as the hurricane raged about in the Caribbean and began its northward movement. By the radio compass, Kincaid located the point of "greatest activity" and its direction. He took several hours' observations as the storm advanced, computing its center and then keeping track of its course. When he checked later with weather reports, he found that he had plotted hurricane's path accurately.

Hereafter, when weather experts predict a hurricane and its general direction, its course can be determined exactly by the method used by Kincaid, it is believed. The general warnings sent out this week to points along the Florida coast undoubtedly saved many lives and prevented much damage that might have been done.

"No, I have never been to a movie, a theater, nor a professional athletic contest in my life and have no desire to attend one," was the statement made by James Johnson, age fifty-three, at Pittsburgh, in refusing an invitation to attend a movie. Elk once roamed this country from coast to coast.

State Will Oppose Restraining Order On Tax Collections

The state of Georgia will oppose legal proceedings brought by N. A. Miller and others to obtain a permanent injunction restraining the state from collecting the individual tax on insurance agents imposed by the legislature at its last session, it was announced Saturday by Attorney General George M. Napier. The case will be heard August 7 before Judge John D. Humphries, of the Fulton superior court.

Judge Humphries Saturday granted a temporary restraining order preventing the state from collecting this tax until the case can finally be adjudicated. Arguments over the question of whether or not the injunction will be made permanent will be submitted August 7 by Attorney General Napier representing the state and by attorneys representing the insurance companies.

Crackers Take Double Header From Volunteers

Markle and Rogers Hurl Atlanta Clan To Double Victory

They have went and done it! Saturday afternoon, while rain clouds hovered over the park and threatened to play their usual pranks, Dan Michalove's Crackers stepped out and grabbed both games of a double bill from the Nashville Volunteers. The first they won by a score of 4 to 2 and the second by a 3-0 count.

The fact that they were Dan Michalove's Crackers yesterday and are Spiller's Crackers today leads one to believe that the performance of the homelings was in the form of a farewell to their departing owner. However that may be they did play Nashville twice and they did win both games to land on top of the heap for the present series by a 3 to 2 game count.

And the most encouraging part of the deal is that the Crackers hit when hits were needed and when safeties meant counters on the scoreboard. During the present series they have been woefully weak on stick work and for that matter no great number of bingles flowed from home-town bats yesterday but those that came were good for runs and runs win ball games for anybody.

Well Scattered. In the first frames the Tennesseans planned a total of 10 hits off the delivery of Cliff Markle but the diminutive right hander kept them scattered and but two runs resulted. The Crackers were able to pound out but six safeties off Green but three of these came in the eighth inning and accounted for three runs—enough to win the game.

Likewise in the second encounter the homelings were able to tap Osborne for but three safe bingles but two of these were doles in the sixth inning and, coupled with four bases on balls, accounted for the three runs made. The visitors fished five safeties from the delivery of long Tom Rogers, but they were scattered with never more than one in any one frame.

Tommy Griffith, the tow-headed cleanup man for the Crackers, may be given credit for the Cracker triumph in the initial battle for it was Tommy's double to the left field bank which scored Niehoff and Niehaus in the eighth with the tying and winning tallies. "Mule" Hiss also singled in this inning and scored Griffith but the game was on ice then.

The Skipper Starts. The nightcap stood at zero all for five trying innings, then with dark-ness creeping on the Crackers came to bat in the sixth. Skipper Niehoff started the inning by taking a free pass to the initial corner, then Niehaus aided the boss along by laying down a sacrifice. Bert was forced to camp at second when Griffith filed to Ruble in deep left but then Gilbert came along with a long double to the right field bank and the boss romped homeward.

This tally would have been enough to win the home game but "Mule" Hiss knew it he'd be doubled into left corner by Gilbert. Brook, Durocher and Rogers then walked in rapid succession off the delivery of Johnson, who had been sent in to relieve Osborne after the brace of doubles had sent the three right-hander to the showers. The big pitcher sent down the Crackers to the right field bank and the boss romped homeward.

Brief Stories of the Leather Pushers

New York, July 31.—The middleweight championship battle between Tiger Flowers, of Atlanta, and Harry Greb, originally scheduled for August 12 at the New Garden, has been postponed until August 19 at the request of Walk Miller, manager of the Tiger, who wired McMahon today asking for an extension of time for his fighter to get into shape for the Pittsburgh battle.

Paul Berlenbach has definitely decided to go through with his fight with Francis Charles, light-heavyweight champion of France, at Ebbets field, August 11. This will be a 10-round affair and will head an all-star show for the benefit of the Jewish community center of Bensonhurst.

The speedy little fighters will get all the play from the local fans this week. Every club has a collection of the tiny little slated to go and there ought to be plenty of action all along the line. Dexter Park stadium will start off Monday night with Paul Moran, the veteran New Orleans lightweight, against Bobby Burns, the Brownsville entry, for ten rounds.

Tom McCarroll, matchmaker at the Queensboro stadium, has a nifty array of tiny punches for his show on Tuesday night. Kid Kaplan, former featherweight champion, who is now a full-fledged lightweight, will make his bow in that division in a 10-round argument against Tommy Cello, the sharpshooter from California. Ace Eudkin, the rough young man who knocked out Ruby Goldstein a few weeks ago, will start again at the Coney Island stadium Friday night when he tackles Stanislaus Lozys, the Chilean fighter, in the main event of ten rounds.

Tex Rickard, it develops, has a strong ace still to play it by any chance obstacles are placed in his way such as will prevent his staging the heavyweight championship match between Jack Dempsey and Gene Tunney in New York. The following telegram was sent to the promoter:

"The scheduled stadium at Philadelphia, seating 200,000, is at this time closed. It is impossible to bring the Dempsey-Tunney match here. (Signed) Harry Greb."

SIX SLUGGERS LEADING LIST IN SOUTHERN

Memphis, Tenn., July 31.—(AP)—Hendrick, Yaryan, Tucker, Bigelow, Taylor and Carroll tonight are the "big six" among Southern association batters with Hendrick, hefty New Orleans infielder, still the biggest of them all with a percentage of .395—the net result of having smashed out a total of 166 safe drives, 54 for extra bases, in 420 times at bat.

Yaryan, Birmingham, is runner-up to Hendrick with a mark of .387, and Ollie Tucker, Pelican outfielder, has the next best percentage, .380. Bigelow, Chattanooga, is hitting .372; Taylor, Memphis, .371, and Carroll, Chattanooga, .371. During the week Yaryan replaced Carroll in second place and Taylor moved up at the expense of his teammate, Klugman, who dropped back a notch behind Williams, of Mobile. Williams has a count of .360 and Klugman .357. The averages account for games through Thursday.

Mike Craggins, New Orleans pitcher, holds the highest rating of the twirlers with 12 games won and only two lost and also is the heaviest hitter among the pitchers. He has batting percentage of .387 in 35 games. Roy, of New Orleans, has the greatest number of victories to his credit of any—19—but has lost eight and tied one of his games. Lisenbee, Memphis, has won 18 and lost eight.

West, of Birmingham, holds home-run honors with 16, but Yaryan is close second with 15. Eddie Lewis, Chattanooga, has piled up 22 stolen bases for the top mark in that department, four ahead of Niehoff, of Atlanta.

In team batting Nashville is holding the leadership with a percentage of .245. New Orleans is best in fielding, .973. In defensive play New Orleans has the call, holding their opponents to a total of 455 runs and with only 109 errors chalked up in 303 games. Birmingham players scored the highest total of runs 638.

JACK TO FILE BOUT PERMIT IN GOTHAM

New York, July 31.—(AP)—Topped by a decision on the licensing issue, Tex Rickard will have Jack Dempsey file a formal application for a fighting permit with the state athletic commission upon the champion's arrival in New York from Chicago, probably the latter part of next week. The commission already has sanctioned Dempsey's match with Gene Tunney in the shape of a double-header at the Yonkers stadium on September 16, but doubt exists as to the action which may be taken by the license committee, an associated body. Rickard is confident this committee will not throw any obstacle in the way of the fight but he hopes to have the matter in shape for settlement at the next meeting of the licensing officials, August 10.

Tunney already has made the first move toward obtaining his own license by making a personal appeal to the chairman of the license committee, Colonel J. J. Phelan, the latter has until August 5, 1926, to indicate what course he will take.

Rickard took cognizance today of the effort of B. C. Clements, Chicago promoter, to obtain a license for his fight with Willie and bears the champion's signature dated March 3, 1926, at Chicago.

Barons Obtain First Baseman

Minneapolis, Minn., July 31.—(AP)—The Johnnies club, of the American association, was sold to the Birmingham Southern association team today. The sale price was not disclosed.

Spiller Takes Reins Of Cracker Destiny From Dan Michalove

R. J. Spiller, Atlanta financier and big property owner of Atlanta, became president and sole owner of the Atlanta baseball club Saturday at a conference room in the Atlanta and Lowry National bank.

The deal, in the highest price ever involved, is the highest price ever paid for a minor league baseball franchise in the history of the game.

All leases, holdings and rights on players were transferred to the new Cracker owner in the conference with the officials of the club. In the transfer of the ownership of the club Spiller resumes the place held by him in the years of 1921 and 1922, in which he did much toward the rise of the Crackers.

In 1921 Spiller purchased the club from Charles Frank and operated it for two seasons, finally selling it to Dan Michalove and others.

DICK HAWKINS TAKES CHARGE OF CONSTITUTION SPORTS

(By The Associated Press)

The New Orleans Pelicans, leading the Southern association, led to Robinson and Burke for 13 safeties and another the league trailing Little Rock Travelers under a 13-0 score Saturday.

The Atlanta Crackers scored a double victory over Nashville, winning each game of a doubleheader with a three-run rally. The scores were 4-2 and 3-0.

With the score tied at 1-1 the Crackers chalked up a trio of markers in their half of the eighth to win the opener and then broke up a pitching duel with a three-run rally in the sixth frame of the final, seven-inning game.

Wet grounds forced postponement of the scheduled Chattanooga at Birmingham and Memphis at Mobile games.

Wilkey Moore won his 21st game of the season for Greenville, of the South Atlantic association, beating Macon, 5 to 3. A scheduled second game was halted in the third inning by rain.

Asheville went into second place ahead of Macon by dividing a doubleheader with Columbia as the Peaches lost. The Tarheels won the opener, 6 to 3 with a three-run rally in the tenth inning but lost the second game, 5 to 4, when Mahaffey bested Ellis in a pitching duel.

Knoxville beat Spartanburg, 8 to 4 in the first game of their twin bill but the Smoky winning streak was halted at eight games when Walker held an edge over Myers in the second encounter and the Spartans won, 5 to 4.

After dropping the first game at Charlotte, 11 to 3, Augusta came back in the second with a shutout, 1 to 0 victory. The North Carolina Cardinals will be carried to the Short Hills, N. J., course merely as a spectator but Fowlkes held them to six safeties in the final game.

In the Southeastern league, Jacksonville won a doubleheader from St. Augustine, 9-5 and 7-1. Albany nosed out a 3-2 victory over Montgomery in ten innings, and Columbus bested Savannah, 2 to 1.

Former Collegiate Star Takes Helm of Sport Department

Dick Hawkins, who takes charge of the sport department of The Constitution today. Dick has been connected with The Constitution for the past 18 months and has been a regular contributor to the section. He came to The Constitution after receiving his training in sports under some of the best known men of the fraternity.

Just what Dick breaks on the stockade course is not posted on the bulletin board at this writing, but it is rumored that he plays a good game of golf. Certainly he writes a good, readable golf story. Some of them appeared in The Constitution recently, when Dick covered the national tournament at Detroit. Dick is one of the things Dick is really crazy about. He has studied it and he is still studying it. And what he writes about it is straight from the gun and the shoulder.

Dick is thoroughly posted and conversant in all branches of sport. Throughout his newspaper career he has been identified in some way with the sporting departments of his various papers on which he has served. He is a member of the Detroit Golf Club, and he is a member of the Detroit Athletic Club.

Dick's first training under Harry Dayton, one of the best known sports writers in the north, who for many years was sporting editor of The Detroit Journal. Dayton is a baseball writer of note and is now serving The Flint Daily Journal.

Dick picked up additional sport writing experience on the Detroit Free Press. He has been a contributor to The Michigan Golfer.

Coming to The Constitution about 18 months ago, Dick has been connected with the local and telegraph departments, and, as has been said, doing time in the sports department as well.

The time came to fill the chair of the sporting editor, and Dick Hawkins was informed that he was "it."

Furthermore, the best evidence of The Constitution has to offer that the sport department has a capable skipper and put him on the job this morning's Constitution.

Madden Stock To Be Auctioned

Lexington, Ky., July 31.—(AP)—Three stallions, nearly 100 brood mares comprising all of the thoroughbred breeding stock of John E. Madden, will be sold at public auction at Mr. Madden's Hanburg Place farm here November 8 and 9, it was announced today.

After the horse sale, Mr. Madden will offer 1,000 acres of Hanburg Place, comprising 2,500 acres, to the highest bidder.

It is thought that the sale will surpass the half-million-dollar mark. Mr. Madden, who has announced his determination to retire from the breeding industry and devote all of his time to racing, will retain his favorite stallion, Sir Martin, the only American horse ever favorite to win the English derby.

Among the mares to be sold are the dams of Crusader, Dracons and Edith Cavell. The stallions to be sold are Playfellow, Runamede and Star Master.

PELS TROUNCE LITTLE ROCK IN HIT FEST

BILL TILDEN AND RICHARDS BATTLE TODAY

New York, July 31.—(AP)—The six-year-old struggle of the courts between William T. Tilden and Vincent Richards will be carried to the finals of the metropolitan tennis championship tomorrow for its third outbreak of the 1926 season.

The rivals have qualified to renew their feud in both doubles and singles, but interest will center in the latter battle, for Tilden will have to account for the record he has made in the hands of his youthful foe.

Tilden Beats Jap. In the semi-final tests today Tilden defeated Takekichi Harada, of Japan, 7-5, 6-1, 6-2, and Richards conquered Dr. George King, of New York, 6-4, 6-4, 7-5. In the doubles matches Tilden and Richards defeated King and Watson M. Washburn, 6-3, 6-3, 6-4.

Tilden's victory over Harada put the Philadelphia in position to extend his 1926 march of triumph to five consecutive tournaments. The national titleholder has swept through the New England, middle states, Clay tour and Longwood tournaments without defeat, and his masterful exhibition of stroking today indicated that Richards will face a different Tilden tomorrow from the player he defeated twice in Florida.

Large number of smaller lights scattered around. Tickets for the fight will be placed on sale Monday and it is understood that a downtown office will be opened by Promoter Lots.

Already the overhead for this show has exceeded that for any fight ever staged here and Lots is expecting a $15,000 gate. If that should fail to materialize he will have to pocket a loss. The tickets for the show were printed Saturday and if they are all sold the gross home will be $18,000.

Last Appearance. This will be the first time that Tiger Flowers has fought here since he was captured by the champion of the world from Harry Greb. Also it will be the Tiger's last appearance in a ring before he meets McCreary Saturday and if they are all sold the gross home will be $18,000.

McCreary, the big Boston boxer, has been on Flowers' trail for the last two years and is one of the few men that Flowers has never met. McCreary will have the advantage in weight, being 30-odd pounds heavier than the champion.

The Boston giant is well liked around his home city and has fought and defeated most of the fighters that have felt up to Flowers' skill and power.

John E. Madden, Iowa's sprint and broad-jump star, recently watched his younger brother, Dick, almost lose a leg in a fall from the mile run at a recent meet.

Display Runs Second To Famous Bradley Entry In Fast Race

Chicago, July 31.—(AP)—Boot to Boot, the little iron horse from Colonel Edward R. Bradley's Idle Hour farm, won the 18th renewal of the American Derby, once the classic of the American turf, at the new Washington park race track today, while 37,000 spectators cheered their tribute.

The three-year-old son of North Star-Padula swept under the wire two lengths ahead of W. J. Salmon's Display, winner of the $50,000 Preakness and the leading eastern contender. Another length back in third place came Black Maria, owned by W. R. Coe, of New York, and the only filly in the race. Smiling Gus and Bolton, the entries of C. E. Darnell, of New York, finished fourth and fifth, respectively. The time for the mile and a half was 2:30 1-5.

Fifth Victory. The race was the fifth derby Bradley's campaigners have captured this year and the richest of them all, with its purse of $100,000 added. The victory was worth $80,000 to the Lexington, Ky., horseman, and ran his total winnings in derbies alone considerably over the $300,000 mark.

He captured the $50,000 Kentucky derby with Bubbling Over, the $100,000 Louisiana derby and the $25,000 Latonia derby with Bagenbagg and the $10,000 Ohio derby with Boot to Boot three days ago.

Today's race was the twelfth start for Boot to Boot this season and the little brown colt never has finished out of the money in any of them. He was second choice in the betting, regarding his followers at the rate of $6.00 for each $2 ticket to win and $3.50 to place in the modified mutual betting. Display, the favorite, was 60 cents to $1 to place.

To Jockey Albert Johnson, Ex-terminator's pilot and the veteran who was astride Bubbling Over in the Kentucky derby victory, goes much of the credit for Boot to Boot's triumph. He gave the Bradley entry a handstand, thousands of fans, just as the pace with the skill of a Sande and allowing Bolton to set the early pace.

He nursed Boot to Boot's stride, trailered him until the second mile, and home. As Bolton swung around the turn into the stretch, Johnson jerked Boot to Boot in the lead and shook off Display three days ago.

Bolton faded rapidly, relinquishing second place to Display while Black Maria took third.

The derby will stand out as one of the most exciting races in the annals of the American turf. The rich prize brought to the barrier only five starters and only three of them were rated as chances to win.

Various conditions conspired against a more imposing entry list. Injuries to leading three-year-olds, including Bubbling Over, Bubbling Over, were damaged and doubt over the permanency of the meeting, due to injunction proceedings in connection with the race, also had an influence. Against these handicaps the officials of the Illinois Jockey club provided the best field available to them, were forced to give up their hopes of a three-year-old championship of America.

DIXIE LEAGUE HITTING ACE SET TO CLIMB

New Orleans, July 31.—Harvey Hendrick, who is blazing the trail for the battle in the Southern league this season, has been sold to the Brooklyn club of the National league, according to announcement made by President Heinemann. Hendrick will not join the Robins until next spring, thus relieving any fear that he might go up before the close of the present campaign, as was the case of Alvin Crowder, whom the Barons let go to Washington in the midst of the pennant fight.

The sale of Hendrick is the first big announcement made by President Heinemann. He did not care to divulge the exact amount of money concerned in the Hendrick deal, stating he preferred to wait for confirmation from the Brooklyn end before giving out any statement.

Since early in the season it was predicted that some major league club would be attracted by Hendrick's sensational hitting with the Pelicans. It seemed impossible for him to be kept out of the big show after this season. He has hit sensationally for the Pelicans all year and is now just at the 400 mark.

Hendrick hit 218 for Providence in the International league last season. When Larry Gilbert hit "Snuffy" Henry for he pinned his hopes on making a first baseman out of Hendrick and succeeded. He started in as an outfielder, breaking into the lead position in the Hendrick deal, both the Robins and the Indians gave Hendrick a trial, but he was not found right enough for the big show.

However, since Larry Gilbert turned the big fellow into a first baseman, he has been playing in the lead position. He is a star in the field his position, but it is steady in a pinch. That he can hit all kinds of pitching seems beyond doubt, as he pitched in the Southern league and was able to stop him.

Besides, there is no faster man in the league on the path than Hendrick. He is a home run hitter. While at Providence he was a quarter-miler and a member of Vandy's record-breaking relay team. He played baseball and football at Vandy, and is a natural athlete.

Hendrick follows several other Pelicans who left New Orleans and made good with Brooklyn. Danny Vane and "Hank" De Berry, who formed a winning battery for the Pelicans, are still with that team. That makes Usually open air shows are subject to the threat of rain, but in this instance Flowers and McCreary will fight rain or not. Promoter Lots announced Saturday that no rainride seats will be put up on the diamond at Spiller's, and all seats will be under cover. In order to further prevent the weather interfering with the match, Lots has ordered a canopy made to go over the ring. It will afford protection from the rain, but will not spoil the fans' views of the contest. In fact, it will not be erected unless the weather is threatening.

Lots has also let a contract for the lighting of the park. Huge electric lights will be installed on strategic points throughout the grand stand, with

Practice To Begin For Scribes' Tourney At West End Monday

Monday morning the annual newspaper golf tournament will get under way on the West End course with one of the largest list of entrants ever to enter the newspaper tourney. Practice will begin Monday and qualifying rounds will be played on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

Interest in the tournament this year is also keener than in any before, owing to the large number of trophies and prizes offered by different business houses and individuals in the city. Late Saturday night 22 different prizes had been donated for the winners in the flights.

One of the biggest among the prizes received was the handsome silver loving cup offered by Tiger Flowers, middleweight champion of the world, now in Atlanta for a bout Friday night.

The big interest in the tournament is in the Dan Michalove cup, a perpetual trophy, which has not been won by the same individual more than once.

The final plans will be arranged at a meeting of the tournament committee Sunday. The qualifying four-somes will be announced Monday morning in The Constitution, following the meeting.

22 Home Games Left On Cracker Schedule

BY CLARENCE NIXON.

Twenty-three games on the road plus 22 games at Spiller field and Bert Niehoff's Cracker clan will pack up their striped uniforms and call it a season.

The Crackers have eight more games left of the present series to be played on the home lot, four with the Memphis Chicks and four with the Chattanooga Lookouts, then they take to the road for the last trip around Mr. Martin's baseball loop.

The Niehoffians start the trip by visiting Chattanooga for a six-game stay including a doubleheader, the series ending August 15. They have a rest day coming Monday, August 16, and open a three-game argument with the Nashville Volunteers, ending on Thursday, August 19. Another rest day is booked for Friday, August 20, and Saturday they invade the Chicks' apple orchard for a four-game set.

From there they will hike over to visit the cellar-keepers of the league. They play the Little Rock bunch four games. The league-leading Pelicans are the next opponents of the Crackers.

The New Orleans gang will entertain the Crackers for three games, during which the Niehoff outfit should be able to pull in a couple of wins, judging from the way they treated the league-leaders in the last series with them.

They start the final month of battle—September—with the highly esteemed Barons in Birmingham. Four games with them and the Crackers will bid the Birmingham fans goodbye for the season. Next comes the Mobile Bears. They play the Bears a three-game series all in two days, and then our baseball team will be back home for the last six games of the season.

They will bring the Bears back to Spiller field for a five-game set with a doubleheader thrown in for good measure. And the last two days of the Cracker season will be taken up by the Barons, on September 17-18.

The Crackers face a hard bunch of teams during their last stand on foreign soil and the local clan is far down in the pile of figures. This, however, is something very unusual for Bert Niehoff's bunch of ball players, as the Cracker skipper has never failed to finish well up in the first division with the rest of the league's best clubs.

She ad Speed.

Last season he took the Crackers and must have whispered something in their ears, for right about the middle of the season when everybody had given up hope for the Crackers getting anywhere near the top of the ladder, he took his ball-team and started a drive which ended in a pennant.

After measuring things up we find that the team appears to be as strong as the one last year, and if we are not mistaken the hurling staff is somewhat improved from that of last season. But all in all we believe old man jinx is playing some of his pranks on the Atlantans, for they beat the best in the league and then lose to the poorest in the league and somewhere or other we are inclined to believe the Crackers have been changed.

Hargrave Holds Firm As National Leader; Fothergill Slips Back

Chicago, July 31.—(AP)—The leading teams in both major leagues boosted their batting averages this week while their nearest contenders slipped a bit. The New York Yankees' wrecking crew boosted the team average back to an even .300 in official figures issued today, while Pittsburgh gained three percentage points on the slipping Reds.

Traynor seems to be responsible for most of the Pittsburgh Pirates' gain in batting, as he got 13 hits in the last seven games, and moved from seventh to fifth place in the leading 10 hitters of the National league. Lester Bell, of St. Louis, kept a step ahead of him, with 14 hits in seven games, to win fourth place. Seven of Bell's hits were for extra bases, two being home runs.

Hargrave, Cincinnati catcher, easily held his leadership of the league in batting, gaining four points to reach .382. Stephenson, the new Chicago Cubs' outfielder, hopped in between Hargrave and his Red teammate, Bressler, to take second place, as Bressler had an off week.

Kiki Cuyler, of Pittsburgh, dropped out of the first 10 hitters, but stole three bases this week, leaving his rivals well behind with a total of 22. Bottomley, of St. Louis, failed to get the ball over the fence this week, but his total of 14 home runs still is tied for lead among the National league sluggers. Bell's two this week gave him 11, and Southworth, sent to the Giants by St. Louis, also net two, to make 11. Hack Wilson, the Chicago slugger, tied with Jim Bottomley, also failed to connect for a circuit drive this week.

Ed Brown, Boston outfielder, is the new face in the leading 10 hitters this week, taking Cuyler's place. Leading hitters in the National are: Hargrave, Cincinnati, .382; Stephenson, Chicago, .376; Bressler, Cincinnati, .365; L. Bell, St. Louis, .357; Traynor, Pittsburgh, .353; Grantham, Pittsburgh, .350; Herman, Brooklyn, .343; Brown, Boston, .342; E. Smith, Pittsburgh, .347; Christensen, Cincinnati, .335.

The leading fence busters of the American league fattened their averages this week in double-figure scores, except Fothergill, of Detroit, whose mark of well over 400 is slowly crumbling. Big Falk, of the Chicago White Sox, who made such a spurt two weeks ago to pass Babe Ruth, was the only one of the leading 10 hitters to slump this week. To remedy this, Manager Eddie Collins, of the Sox, edged into the first 10.

Ruth Gaining.

Ruth got two more home runs, a triple and a double this week, besides numerous singles, his home-run total in games including Wednesday being 31. Simmons, of Philadelphia, and Tony Lazzeri, of New York, have 15 home runs apiece, and Ken Williams, of St. Louis, once Ruth's rival, has broken double figures in circuit smashes.

S. Rice, of Washington, caught Hunnefeld, the speedy Chicago outfielder, in the stolen base competition, each now having 16, with Mostil, also of the White Sox, just one behind. Rice and Mostil got two apiece this week.

Another successful week like the past one and Ruth will cross the century mark in tallies. He made eight this week, to reach 93, going into a tie with Gehrig, of New York, who has been leading the Babe all season.

George Uhle, of Cleveland, went into a tie with Herb Pennock, of New York, in victories on the mound, each having 16. Pennock is charged with six defeats and Uhle with eight. Pete Donohue, of the Reds, is the nearest to the mark in the National league, with 15 victories to nine defeats. Fats of the Athletics, retained his clean slate of eight victories by finishing out one game this week without affecting his record.

Leading American league hitters: Fothergill, Detroit, .409; Ruth, New York, .377; Fats, Detroit, .367; Menzel, New York, .360; Burns, Cleveland, .362; Falk, Chicago, .358; Heilmann, Detroit, .353; Mostil, Chicago, .354; Gehrig, Washington, .353; M. Collins, Chicago, .345.

Fred Minnich Wins Columbus Invitation Tourney

Atlantan Vanquishes Crenshaw in Finals By Score of 4 and 2

Columbus, Ga., July 31.—(By the Associated Press.)—Fred Minnich, Brookhaven club entry, Atlanta, and member of the University of Georgia foursome, won the Columbus Country Club invitation golf tournament this afternoon, defeating Jack Crenshaw, of Montgomery, 4 and 2.

During the afternoon two blinding rains beat down, necessitating a postponement of the match for a few minutes. Despite the driving rain Minnich continued to disregard the weather conditions and played steady golf while his opponent appeared a bit worried.

The fifth was the first rainy hole, the players resuming play when able to see the ball in the shower. At this juncture Minnich held an upper hand with two holes as he shot par golf on the first five holes. Crenshaw shot par on the sixth when Minnich made a bad lie in the rough.

When the pair reached the eighth Minnich's lead was sliced to one up, his drive on the seventh pulling to the right and his second shot going in the tall grass. Crenshaw shot par on the hole. On No. 8, Crenshaw shot a birdie—the only one of the match—to square the match, each taking a four on the ninth.

The cards:
Minnich, out 444 555 744—42
Minnich, in 554 535 3—30
Crenshaw, out 564 538 434—40
Crenshaw, in 556 645 4—35

Crenshaw began to crack on the third hole of the inward journey after splitting in fives on the first two holes. The Atlantan went into the lead at this hole, when the former University of Alabama star's drive pulled to the left in the rough. He had trouble aplenty in getting out for a six.

At the 14th the two golfers and large gallery were drenched a second time, playing being checked for a few minutes. That Minnich was a sure victor came to light at this hole when he increased his lead to three up. His drive was true to the green. The 15th was halved and Crenshaw, realizing that a four was necessary to get down on the 16th, conceded the match to Minnich, walking over and shaking hands.

Crenshaw won his way to the finals this morning by defeating R. M. Hitt, of Savannah, while Minnich eliminated Lem Hill, local entry, in his semi-final match.

Savannah Club Gets New Player

Savannah, Ga., July 31.—(AP)—The purchase of another important player for the Savannah club is announced by Charles Thens, secretary of the Indians, today. The new addition is Joe Brennan, former manager of the Montgomery Lions, who was recently shifted from the Montgomery team to the Southern league.

Brennan is a shortstop man. He comes to Savannah with an excellent fielding and batting record. The new player will be in the Savannah lineup on Tuesday.

Deporters see the purchase of new players as an indication of releases, since the Savannah club will in no way violate the player limit. Just where ex will fall is problematical.

Branch was suspended to permit the signing of Flynn, leading batter of the Southeastern league, who joined the Savannah club yesterday.

Branch has been suffering a foot injury since being spiked by Player Snipes of the St. Augustine club here over a week ago.

It is not unlikely that Boggs will draw a suspension while Brennan gets his chance to set Savannah's team about the top of the heap.

Elizabeth Ryan Wins Net Tourney

Manchester-by-the-Sea, Mass., July 31.—(Special.)—Miss Elizabeth Ryan, of Santa Monica, Cal., second ranking woman tennis player, placed a leg on the Essex club challenge bowl here Saturday by defeating Miss Eleanor Goss, of New York, in straight sets, 6-0, 6-3.

It took Miss Ryan just 31 minutes to dispose of her opponent. She reeled off 11 games before dropping three in a row in the second set.

The weather favored Miss Ryan greatly, creating conditions similar to those under which she has played in England for the past 12 years before returning to the United States.

In the first set Miss Ryan allowed Miss Goss but 11 points, taking six games without difficulty.

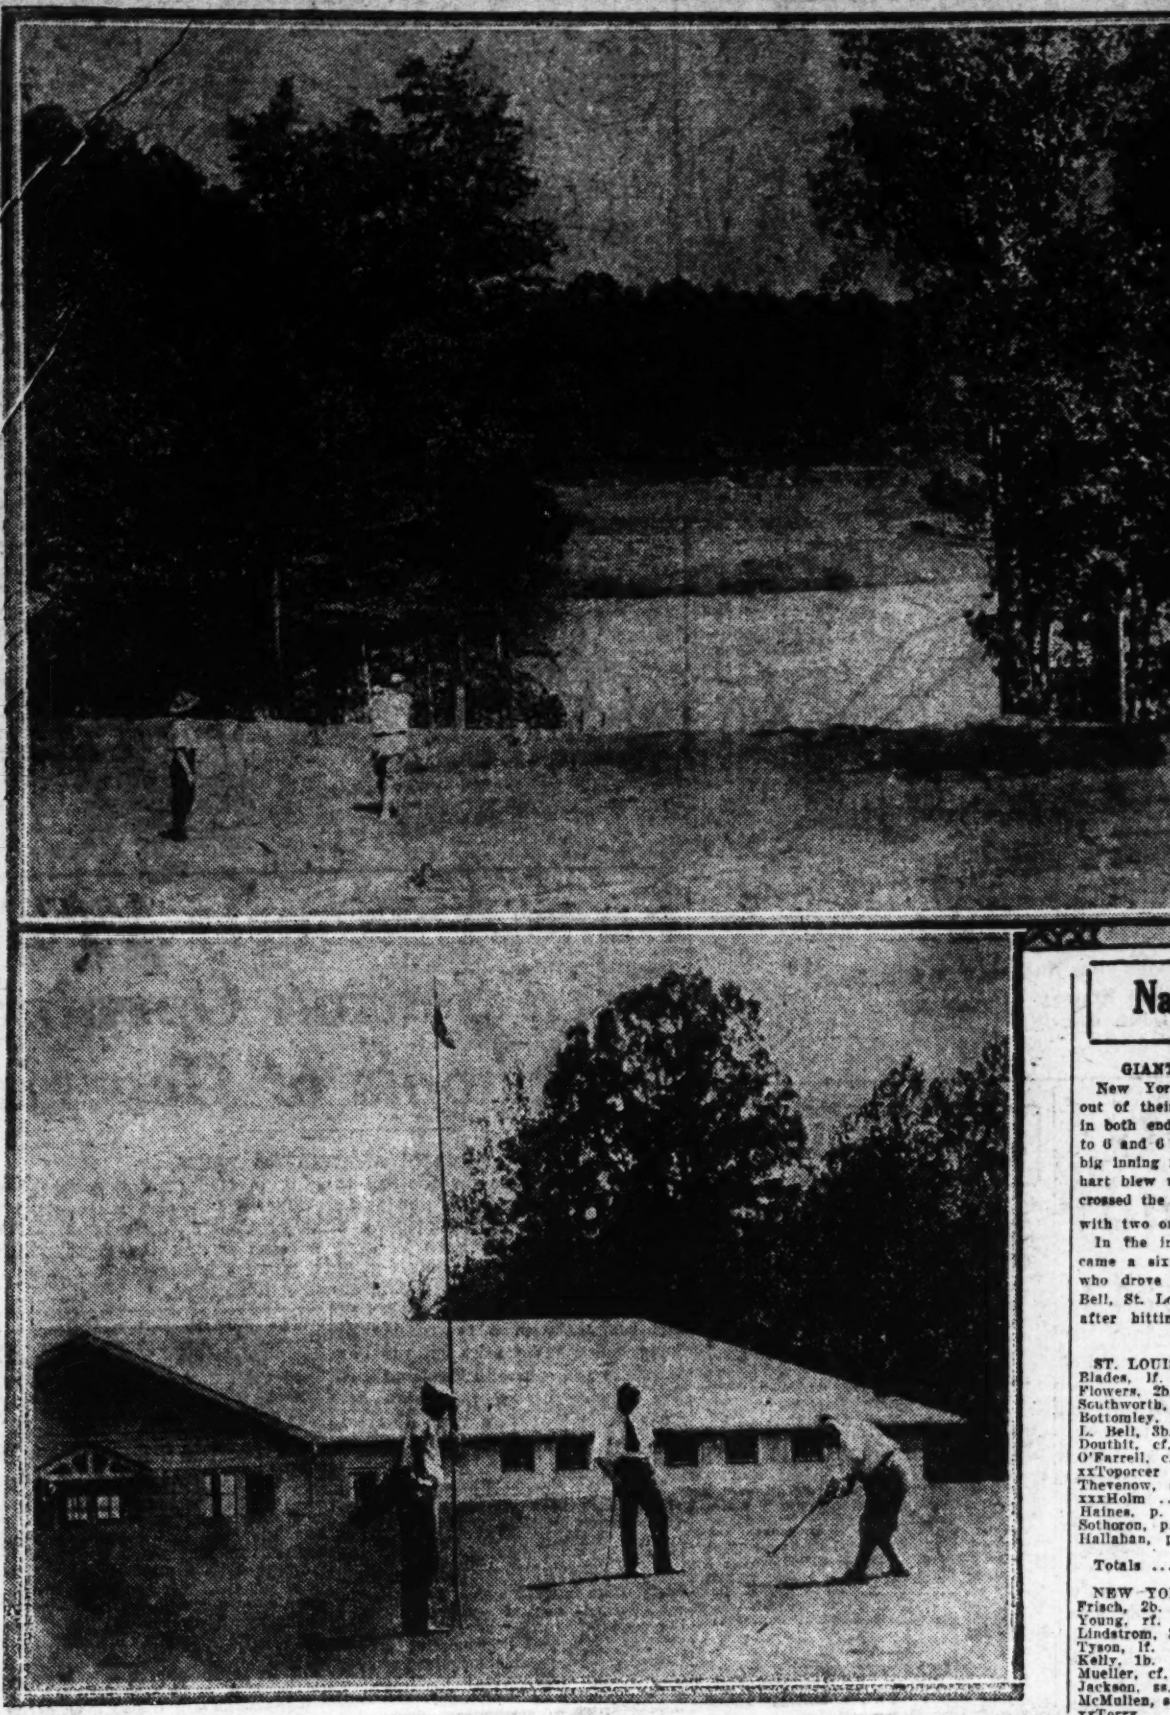

The second set, however, was not so easily taken. She ran five games and then dropped the next three. The Californian made up for this and took the final game at love.

Miss Ryan is the second player to gain a leg on the bowl, Miss Helen Wills, the national champion, being the first to have her name inscribed on the trophy.

Glenn, Le Gette Win Golf Prize

BY DICK HAWKINS.

Nestled in the hills not so many miles from the heart of Atlanta is the beautiful Black Rock Lake and Country Club.

Saturday at the formal housewarming hundreds of Atlantans will go over the beautiful grounds, admire the golf course, marvel at the natural beauty of the spot and gaze in rapture at the beautiful appointments of the clubhouse and grounds, but how many will read the story of four years' labor and sacrifice spent by Newton Thomas, in its construction?

An undevoted wilderness but four short years ago, Rock Lake Country Club has risen from the wild to become a haven of rest and play. A haven not for the rich but a place where the young salaried man of moderate means can go and spend a delightful day on the lake or take his family to dine of an evening.

The object in the plan of Mr. Thomas was and is to provide a country club where clean morals rather than a bankbook are the standards. Some philanthropists build hospitals, some endow schools and still others build places of clean recreation for the man who loves the outdoors and the clean, bracing air of the hills and lakes. Newton Thomas is one of the last.

With this object in mind the Black Rock Country club will be formally opened next Saturday with a long day of play to which the public is invited. All privileges of the club will be given to the visitors on that day and then from that night on midnight on it becomes the country home of its members and their guests. It is in no way a public amusement park, though friends of the club will be allowed the privileges of the grounds upon presentation of guest cards issued by members. The open house will begin at 10 o'clock in the morning and last until 12 o'clock that night.

A. R. Slade, who shares with Mr. Thomas the ownership of the layout, will have active charge of the club and clubhouse as well as the swimming and fishing privileges and he states that the personnel of the club has been in the past and will be in the future, carefully selected.

Mr. Slade declares that the business of the club will be conducted solely by members of the organization through a committee of governors selected from the membership to act with Mr. Slade and Mr. Thomas.

In other words, the club will be run on the same basis as any country club and the fact that the property is owned by two men rather than by the membership at large will redound to the benefit of the members rather than otherwise. Mr. Slade declares that the club will be a place of recreation for its members but the ladies have not been forgotten. The lake side of the clubhouse will provide a lounging place for the women members and their friends and inside on the pavilion floor will be card tables where members may entertain at bridge teas or luncheons.

The spacious clubhouse, besides being equipped with locker rooms, showers and such conveniences for members, will also have a modern kitchen and dinner dances will be on the program every night in the week. On three nights a week there will be open to members only and on other nights friends of members will be welcomed.

Bathhouses are completed for the convenience of friends of members and hundreds of tons of sand have been placed over the ground leading from the clubhouse to the lake. This will provide an ocean beach for the convenience of swimmers.

The 7000-yard golf course or 18 beautiful holes is already complete though but nine holes are being played on at the present time. Every hole in the 18 is something for a golfer to remember.

To speak of the fish would be to open oneself to the danger of being called untruthful so we will let that matter rest at a mere statement. There are more fish in that little lake than are to be found in the same acreage anywhere in the country outside of a fish hatchery. And that's that. The fishing privileges will be opened to members only on Monday, August 2, and the official of the club will guard the safety of the fish by laying down stringent rules regarding size and bag limit.

After all is said and done the beauty of the free-bound drive, the crystal lake, beautiful clubhouse and the thousand and one attractions at Black Rock Country club can only be appreciated if one looks upon them as they are. Saturday the public will be given this privilege, see for yourself.

GIANTS WIN DOUBLEHEADER.

New York, July 31.—The Giants came out of their slump and beat the Cardinals in both ends of today's doubleheader, by 8 to 0 and 6 to 1. The New Yorkers had one big inning in the second game when Reinhardt blew up in the seventh and six runs crossed the plate. Young drops out a homer with two on in that frame.

In the initial contest, the Giants overcame a six-run advantage aided by Frisch who drove in five of the tallies. Lester Bell, St. Louis third baseman, was stopped after hitting safely in 21 games.

MACON SOLDIER DROWNS AT TYBEE

Savannah, Ga., July 31.—(AP)—While out in a small boat fishing with three of his companions the boat was overturned and Private Ernest Collier, of Macon, company D, was drowned this afternoon about 6 o'clock in the river back of Venetian terrace on Tybee island, the site of the encampment of the 121st Infantry of Georgia National guard. Up to 11 o'clock tonight the body had not been recovered.

Young Collier and Privates J. W. Cline, McCrary and Johnson had been on a fishing trip and were on their way back to the encampment when the boat sprung broadside to a small roller some water got on the inside of the boat. Companions state Collier, who was unable to swim, became excited, the boat capsized.

One of his companions attempted to take Collier in tow and carry him to the shore but was forced to break the hold of the drowning man on the way in order to save himself. Collier went down immediately, weighed down with his heavy shoes and his army uniform.

As soon as news of the drowning had reached the authorities of the encampment and of the town of Tybee all available men were sent to attempt to recover the body. Life guards from the pavilions on the beach were dispatched to the scene and every effort made to bring the body to the surface.

A heavy guard was posted by the camp authorities for the purpose of watching the river to see if the body is brought to the surface by the strong incoming tide with a strong wind behind it.

Numbers of expert swimmers diverged for about three hours and grappling hooks and dragnets were also used but to no avail. Watchers feel that the body will be recovered during the night or early Sunday as the tide was just turning to come in when the accident occurred.

NEW McPHERSON EVIDENCE FOUND

Los Angeles, July 31.—(AP)—District Attorney Ann Keyes declared today the handwriting on the grocery list found in a cottage at Carmel, Cal., was plainly that of Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson. Keyes' agents have reported to him the cottage was occupied late in May by a man identified by residents of Carmel as Kenneth G. Ormiston and a woman companion.

Keyes said he considered it unnecessary to submit the specimen to a handwriting expert, for "any layman can compare the writing with that of Mrs. McPherson." He stated he would submit it directly to the grand jury, when the body renews its investigation next week of the kidnapping story told by the Angelus temple pastor when he appeared at Douglas, Ariz., June 23, after 35 days absence from her flock.

Another development in the McPherson inquiry which commanded interest today was a telegram received by Keyes from a Chicago attorney, apparently retained by Ormiston, who formerly was Mrs. McPherson's temple radio operator, stating that an affidavit from Ormiston was en route to Keyes by air mail. This support of a telegram received by Keyes at the temple purporting to come direct from the former radio man, in which he said a sworn statement, "concerning Carmel incident clearing you, had been forwarded to the evangelist."

Mrs. McPherson recently issued an appeal through the press to Ormiston to come forward and dispose of rumors that she had been his companion at Carmel for ten days after she disappeared on the beach at Ocean Park May 18.

Mrs. McPherson, who is under subpoena before the grand jury Tuesday, was said to have a witness from Carmel whom she intends to take with her before the body. Deputy District Attorney Ryan, who conducted the investigation at Carmel, said he knew who the witness was and that Mrs. McPherson had a right to take anyone she chose to testify.

Report from Monterey today said that B. J. Cohn, process server, received a telegram from Keyes advising him that the grand jury hearing will not be held Tuesday as scheduled and instructing him not to serve the subpoenas on Carmel witnesses.

Both Joe Ryan, deputy district attorney, and William Carter, foreman of the grand jury, were at a loss to explain the Carmel report.

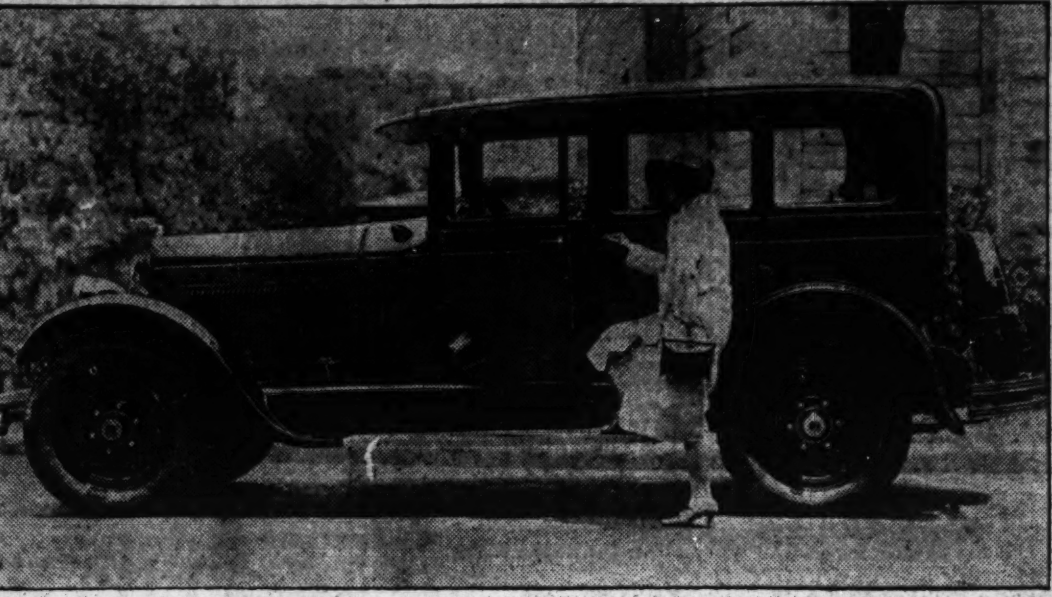

District Attorney Keyes could not be located.

Among more than 100 letters received by Ryan today was one from Oakland signed "D. M. S." which read in part:

"For several days I have been reading in the newspapers a lot of bombastic talk about so-called proof and identification of Mrs. McIntire as a Mrs. McPherson at Carmel."

R. L. SIMPSON, JR., DIES IN MILWAUKEE

Robert L. Simpson, Jr., 24, a son of R. L. Simpson, of 689 Peachtree street, assistant traffic manager of the Southern Railway company, died Saturday in a private sanitarium at Milwaukee, after a long illness diagnosed as sleeping sickness, according to information reaching here Saturday.

In 1924 the young man graduated from the Alabama Polytechnic institute with honors. He won the Phi Beta Theta honorary key and was valedictorian at the graduation exercises. He then went to Milwaukee, where, entering the employ of the Allis-Chalmers company, he was placed in the two-year training school conducted by that company. He was to have received his certificate of completion and to have begun active work in the engineering department in September, his untimely death coming near the end of the training course in which he was making a distinctive record.

Mr. Simpson's illness, which extended over a period of six weeks and puzzled his physicians for some time, was diagnosed, after consultation with several prominent specialists, as sleeping sickness. In an attempt to check the course of the disease two operations were performed on the young man, one on the brain and the other on the spinal column. The end came Saturday after the successful battle on the part of the physicians. The body will be taken to Birmingham, where funeral services will be held Monday morning. Besides his parents, the young man was survived by Mrs. Simpson, Misses Sara and Nancy Simpson.

Easy Formula For Catching Hubby Given

Chicago, July 31.—A simple but effective formula for winning husbands is the latest offering of the cosmetics, from whose convention here this week have issued a broadside of startling revelations about the latest possibilities of synthetic beauty.

"Beauty is the surest path to the altar," Mrs. Ruth J. Maurer, an expert in facial designs, told the convention today. "There is no better recipe for grabbing a man than tinted cheeks, carmine lips, and mysteriously shaded eyebrows."

"The homely woman used to have a hard time," she continued. "She might have wit and charm but some brainless little miss with peach complexion walked off with her sweetheart. There was no hope or help for the homely woman."

But times have changed. There are no homely women any more—except maybe before breakfast—claim the beauty experts. Once beauty was the gift of the gods. Now, they admit, it can be obtained in any beauty parlor.

The letter was typewritten. Officials placed little importance upon it.

Lake Is Crowning Feature Of Avondale Receptions

SCENE AT LAKE AVONDALE.

The crowning feature in Avondale's elaborate system of recreational advantages is now being offered residents of Atlanta's newest suburban city and their guests in Lake Avondale.

With its casino and bathhouse, a substantial brick structure in the old English manor style; its bathing beach with grass, upon a peninsula jutting into the lake; its fleet of canoes, the eight-acre lake has been developed into the setting for recreation of the most wholesome sort and as a center for social affairs.

Lake Avondale was designed to provide a broader opportunity for water sports than is given by the beautiful Avondale swimming pool, but is not to supplant the latter in the pool's distinctive features for play. The lake will be stocked with game fish, and is of sufficient size to enable the use of sails, with which the canoes have been provided.

The lake is the major recreation feature provided this season, and rounds out the facilities already provided by golf course, riding stables, the swimming pool, six-acre playground for children, and tennis courts, to complete schedule of outdoor recreation in the scientifically-planned development. Like these other attractions, the lake was developed for use of dwellers and property owners in Avondale Estates and their guests.

Lake Avondale is a body of clear water formed between rolling hills of the second unit—the lake and golf section—of Avondale Estates. Its water supply is continuous, being provided by a group of large springs which have been tested and approved for healthful qualities. A spillway at the dam which backs the water into a broad ravine keeps the level of the lake constant. The depth of the lake varies from inches to 25 feet, meeting every desire of the bather, and the shallow portions of the head of the lake have a thick carpet of sand from the sea shore.

A wide boulevard, on which paving is being laid by the Meador Construction company as one item of the contract to pave and improve seven miles of street frontage in this unit, encircles the lake for a length of half a mile. A bridge path, offering an attractive course between rolling hills and shimmering water for riders of mount and foot, the Avondale stables runs at a lower level between motor boulevard and lake shore.

The lake is one of the many outdoor attractions that have drawn interest of the public in this region to Avondale Estates as a model suburban city, an interest reflected in a keen demand for houses and lots and in record sales for residential property about Atlanta.

Parks walked into the Ansley hotel to keep an appointment. He stood in the lobby long enough to realize that the date had been made for the Piedmont hotel instead. He walked out and proceeded as far as the Forsyth theater. Now then.

Parks felt a firm hand on his shoulder. Turning he confronted a man who later turned out to be one of Solicitor General Clegg's investigators. Parks didn't know it then. He did later, though. The man said:

"Bewildered in 120-point type was written all over the general face of Mr. Rusk. And, very naturally, he asked what was going on."

"Just keep your shirt on; now," the officer told him kindly, "and come with me."

Parks, complying with this request to the letter, did not remove his shirt and followed the gentleman back to the Ansley. Back in the lobby, Parks still wanted to know what it was all about, and he was again asked to keep his shirt on. He did, and as far as he knew, he was right now, still has it on. Good old Parks.

The Fatal Hatband. Up came another plainclothes man accompanied by a uniformed officer. The latter said, much to Parks' growing bewilderment:

"That's the man—I'd know that hat anywhere. A few hours before, Parks had grabbed it in a rush clearance sale, where hundreds of them were sold at a price which he quoted as a dollar-ninety-nine. He told officers that by 9 o'clock Saturday night there would be at least 1,000 similar skimmers with red, white and blue and green and purple bands on the brows of Atlantans, but it had no convincing effect."

"Where are the other three," the officer said.

"There wasn't but one—we went to a movie and she's gone home now," was Parks' ready reply.

"Come, now, quit your kidding—where are the three men we saw you sitting with and talking to over there in the ladies' parlor a few minutes ago?"

Knows All the Chiefs. "I haven't sat down in the Ansley in weeks—much less the ladies' parlor," Parks answered, by this time indignant.

Parks, in a concentrated effort to identify himself, named several members of the Atlanta police department who were acquaintances of his. "I know Chief Beavers, Chief Jett, Chief Connolly, Chief Fain, Chief Holcombe—why, man, I know all the chiefs of the police department." This had no effect, either.

Then Parks began to produce his credentials. And the officers began to admire the hat, which is, really, a slick thing in the right now of what the well-dressed young man will wear on top. And they decided that, maybe, after all, Parks wasn't the man.

ARREST OF MURDER SUSPECT IS NEAR

Cleveland, July 31.—(AP)—Detective Ora M. Slater, in charge of the Mellett murder investigation, and Acting Chief of Police Hexamer, of Canton, came to Cleveland late today and immediately went into conference with Chief of Police Jacob Kraus and other police authorities over information gathered by local detectives concerning Patrick Eugene McDermott.

In reply to a question by reporters, Slater said he wanted McDermott "damned bad." "He's the man."

The investigators questioned three women and a youth who had been previously questioned by the local police. They also called into conference Detective Captains Joseph Swanson and Emmett J. Potts, who traced the movements of McDermott until he is alleged to have gone to Pittsburgh Wednesday to collect part of $750 he confided to a friend had been promised him to "get rid of" Don Mellett, the Canton publisher.

After questioning the four, Slater and Hexamer left for Akron. Those questioned by the Canton investigators included a youth who, Potts and Swanson declare, informed them of McDermott's movements. The youth, with one of the women, accompanied McDermott to Akron and Massillon, where, they declare, they went with the fugitive last Monday. McDermott told them, they claim, that he went to those cities in an attempt to collect the remainder of money due him "for the job."

The pair also accompanied Potts and Swanson to a summer cottage at Brady lake, in Portage county, where the first hint of McDermott's probable whereabouts was found. A letter found in the cottage indicated that McDermott might be hiding at Perth Amboy, N. J., and police of that city were asked to search for him.

WIFE ACCUSES MOTHER OF ACTRESS OF STEALING SPOUSE

Hollywood, Cal., July 31.—Mrs. Edythe Starke, said by attorneys in the case to be the mother of Pauline Starke, film character, today was sued in a $50,000 alienation suit as an illegal character herself.

The suit was brought by Mrs. Adela Ramos, who asserts that the association between Mrs. Starke and her daughter, Pauline, began here in July, 1925, and that Mrs. Starke offered her husband gifts of money and an automobile to desert her.

According to the papers filed in the hall of records today, Mrs. Starke is asserted to have vamped Senor Ramos nearly all over California and Mexico. And he'd let them have his name and telephone number, he could go. And he did go.

Parks probably was closer to Bert Donaldson during his newspaper career than any other reporter. They worked together on a number of important cases. And Parks' face is as familiar about town as the Grady monument or the city hall, albeit, bearing no resemblance to either.

Parks was still at liberty when this edition went to press.

Get behind the wheel of the Finest Performing Car in America

We want you to drive the car which experts rate highest in America because of its sheer ability to out-perform. This is a Special Demonstration Week for the Hupmobile Eight.

We want you to put it through a real test—to drive it as you like to drive. Only in this way can you realize why this car is up-rooting the old-fashioned idea that mere price or name must necessarily mean prestige. By this test alone can you know why motor car buyers are now sensing the higher prestige of superline performance.

Any attempt to describe the smoothness, the acceleration, the driving ease of this wonderful car, is certain to be futile.

You must drive it to realize why experts speak of it as unrivaled in performance by any other car in all the world—with the possible exception of a very costly car of Italian manufacture.

You must drive it to realize why the celebrated motor car manufacturer who came from France to America to inspect our finest factories and our finest cars, thought fit to take back with him for research and emulation only one car—the Hupmobile Eight.

This most amazing demonstration of motor car performance ability is as near as your telephone.

We will gladly send, to your home or your office, a car for you to drive. Or, if you prefer, stop in—any time that is convenient to you.

Remember, please, that we do not care whether or not you are in the market for a new car. We simply want you to know what a revelation in performance this great straight eight actually is.

Make it a particular point to drive the Hupmobile Eight during this Special Demonstration Week.

FIRESTONE FOUNDED AT BIRTH OF AUTO

Just 25 years ago a young carriage rubber salesman came to Akron to look over the possibilities in the rubber tire field. He had heard that the city was already a center for a number of rubber manufacturing plants and it seemed a likely place to get a start in tire making. This youthful and ambitious young man was Harvey S. Firestone, former Michigan manager for the Columbus Buggy company, in Detroit. Within 15 years he was to be president of the largest concern in the world making motor vehicle tires exclusively.

Organized with a cash capital of $30,000 and going to work with a force of a dozen factory people and a clerical staff of two, the Firestone Tire & Rubber company officially came into being August 3, 1900, and its first month's production averaged about 40 carriage tires daily. In 1925 the Firestone production was 40,000 tires and tubes daily.

Develop Processes.

Remarkable in the history of the company has been its development of basic improvements in tire building and its perfection of labor and waste saving now adopted as standard by the industry. Hardly a year had passed since the arrival of the new company in the field before carriage tire manufacturers were forced to recognize a revolutionary improvement introduced by Mr. Firestone.

Instead of building a score or more of different size carriage tires he showed the wisdom of producing the rubber in reels, cutting the size according to the length desired. This saved the tire distributor, or dealers, the great expense of carrying so many different sizes in stock. The process was patented, so here was the youngster among the tire industries able to license its method to old established manufacturers who gladly adopted the system when they saw the dealers approved it.

During this period, Firestone began making and marketing the cushion tire, the internal-wire carriage tire and the special side-wire tire for heavier vehicles. From the latter developed the Firestone truck tire which for many years has been a leader in its field.

Straight-Side Advent.

In 1904 Firestone brought out the straight-side tire of practically the same construction, as far as attaching it to the rim is concerned, as the straight-side tire of the body. There has been considerable necessary improvements in the rim, however. The Ford company's first large order went to Mr. Firestone. It was for 2,000 straight-side tires. Mr. Ford being opposed to the license restrictions applying on clincher tires. The excellent service rendered by Firestone in this instance proved to be the beginning of the close relationship between the two concerns which continues through the years. The construction of the Firestone plant two, with a capacity of 30,000 3 1/2-inch tires and tubes daily, is a monument to the service Firestone clincher tires render.

The necessity of rim development, Firestone already owning a detachable and demountable rim, soon led to the establishment of its own rim plant. The basic ideas originally patented are in use today, and 87 per cent of all manufacturers of motor vehicles now use Firestone rims.

As the motor vehicle industry grew, Firestone kept pace and the little foundry of about 1,000 square feet in 1902 grew to 100,000 square feet in 1908 and 10 times that figure again in 1915. Today the Firestone Akron plants total approximately 3,000,000 square feet of floor space. A huge new warehouse is now under construction adjoining plant one.

With the growth of the plants, personnel naturally kept pace. Akron, already limited in its number of homes by the constantly expanding rubber industry, afforded quite a problem to accommodate the huge Firestone family. Homes must be constructed so Firestone built Firestone park, a model home colony regarded as a standard by architects and industrial experts everywhere. At the same time a clubhouse was constructed containing auditorium, swimming pool, gymnasium, library, restaurants and cafeterias, bowling alleys, employees' store, club rooms, etc. An athletic field was laid out, medical and dental office established and encouragement given to the foreign-born by way of the inauguration of Americanization schools in cooperation with the city board of education.

Firestone's activities are not confined to Akron by any means. Its constantly increasing markets, its huge requirements of crude rubber and its vast fabric needs have made necessary a plant in Canada, sales branches in all civilized centers of the world, a rubber buying organization in Singapore, where the rubber is washed, refined and shipped, and a large fabric mill in Fall River, Mass. A subsidiary, the Firestone Apsey company, Hudson, Mass., has a capacity of 25,000 pair of footwear daily.

Latest Achievement.
The latest achievement of the Firestone company, and claimed by many to be its greatest, is the introduction and perfection of the full size, gun-dipped, balloon tire. This type of casing is becoming more popular daily and at present nearly 40 per cent of all casing products are balloons. This is all the more remarkable when it is remembered that practically 50 per cent of all cars in use take 3 1/2-inch clinchers.

The demand for tires and the production restriction legislation of foreign countries has occasioned a serious crude rubber shortage, but the Firestone company has anticipated the shortage by the establishment of rubber plantations in Liberia, on the west coast of Africa, and in other tropical countries.

From a business in 1900 of less than $100,000, total sales in 1925 are expected to approximate more than one hundred million dollars. A remarkable record in 25 years.

Fishing Industry Thrives at St. Marys; Shrimp Season To Open

St. Marys, Ga., July 31.—(Special.) The fishing in the St. Marys river and at the jetty has been excellent all summer, big catches being brought in by fishermen and the fishing parties that come here for that purpose, from all over Georgia. The Georgia Coast club of St. Marys is growing in popularity under the management of Mrs. Jim Russell, former manager of the Commercial hotel, Kingsland, Ga.

The shrimp boats are being renovated and put in shape for the opening of the inland water shrimping. The first of August will probably be the opening day of the Georgia canners of St. Marys.

The fall shrimp season was not so good last year, but seems promising this season. When catches are big and the season good, this industry brings a payroll into St. Marys of thousands of dollars weekly and provides work for many.

STRAIGHT EIGHT ENGINE PRAISED BY EXPERTS

The straight eight engine continues to be one of the most popular types in the higher-priced British and Continental markets. The Hupmobile Eight, which was introduced last year, proved little short of a revelation to motorists in those countries who had been accustomed to paying practically double the Hupmobile price in order to secure the added luxury of motor-line engine, according to F. R. Sides, export manager of the Hupp Motor Car corporation, Detroit.

Mr. Sides has noted in several leading English publications numerous very fine articles of praise for the straight-eight engine as a type, and more particularly for the Hupmobile interpretation of it. The eight cylinder motor," says M. W. Bourdon, noted English expert, writing in the Liverpool Post; "is not as some people contend (probably without having had experience of one), a mere fad or just 'something different,' introduced by certain manufacturers to secure orders from people whose interest in motoring had become somewhat faded. It is different, without doubt, not merely, however, in the number of cylinders, but in its performance characteristics as well, when compared to 'sixes' constructed on parallel lines. Other things being equal, its acceleration, top gear climbing, smoothness of running, responsiveness to throttle control, and seeming effortless progression are of high order."

"The eight is more adapted to attain complete smoothness than other types, because the individual impulses of the eight is three-quarters of that of the six, while these smaller impulses commence at shorter intervals which also tends to promote greater smoothness."

"Vibration from reaction is not experienced in an eight-cylinder car because the almost continuous development of power—of turning effort—from successive impulses maintains a balance between the frame of the car and the energy of the engine tending to 'upset' it. The effect of reaction upon the frame in the case of a six-cylinder engine may appear to be negligible under ordinary conditions and at all ordinary speeds; but if the two types are compared under parallel conditions, while the cars are accelerating especially, the great smoothness of the eight is quite evident."

"The foregoing has been written as a result of a trial of an eight-cylinder car which, despite its being—so I believe—the lowest-priced eight on the market, I found successfully from all the tests to which I submitted it. I refer to the Hupmobile. The top gear performance was little short of astonishing; the speedometer must have been registering at least 2 m. p. h. under speed—because its indicator pointed to zero while the car was certainly moving at a slow walking pace on top gear; from that speed to 60 m. p. h. the engine accelerated rapidly and pulled without a tremor or the slightest hesitation in getting away on 'top.'"

Other Comments.

Writing in the London Morning Post, the automobile editor points out the coming of the eight-cylinder engine as "one of the outstanding developments in automotive progress in recent years." "The eight is here," he continues, "not as experiment but as a thoroughly commercialized form of luxury motoring marketed today at prices that compare favorably with six and even with four-cylinder engine vehicles. The Auto, one of the leading English motor magazines, also gives laudable comments on the Hupmobile straight eight. 'I am nothing if not candid,' says the writer. 'I have never sat behind a more wonderful engine than this Hupp. Until its air-intake was really fierce, I could not hear the engine, and even when the car was running at a pace which I have not the hardihood to mention in cold printer's ink, there was only the faintest sibilance of the carburetor to be heard.'"

BEAUTY ADDED IN CUSTOM SEDANS

All the world recognizes and appreciates beauty and luxury, especially in a motor car, but the discriminating motorist—the one to whom the motor car is a companion, a definite part of his life—looks deeper than the more obvious attractions. This is the opinion of T. E. Yarbrough, president of the Yarbrough Motor company, local Studebaker dealer, who opened a formal display of the custom designed sedans recently added to the Studebaker line.

"The American motorist is far more critical than he has ever been before," declares Mr. Yarbrough. "He wants beauty of design and the last word in refinements, but he demands that superlative beauty and luxury be backed by superlative performance and sturdiness. In short, he demands a thoroughbred automobile and is very apt to ask some very pointed questions concerning its pedigree."

"It is to that type of motorist that the Studebaker custom designed sedans will be particularly appealing, for here he will find a line of motor cars with all the beauty of line and fittings which custom design suggests. And, in addition, a pedigree of performance and stamina which is a subject for complimentary comment the world over."

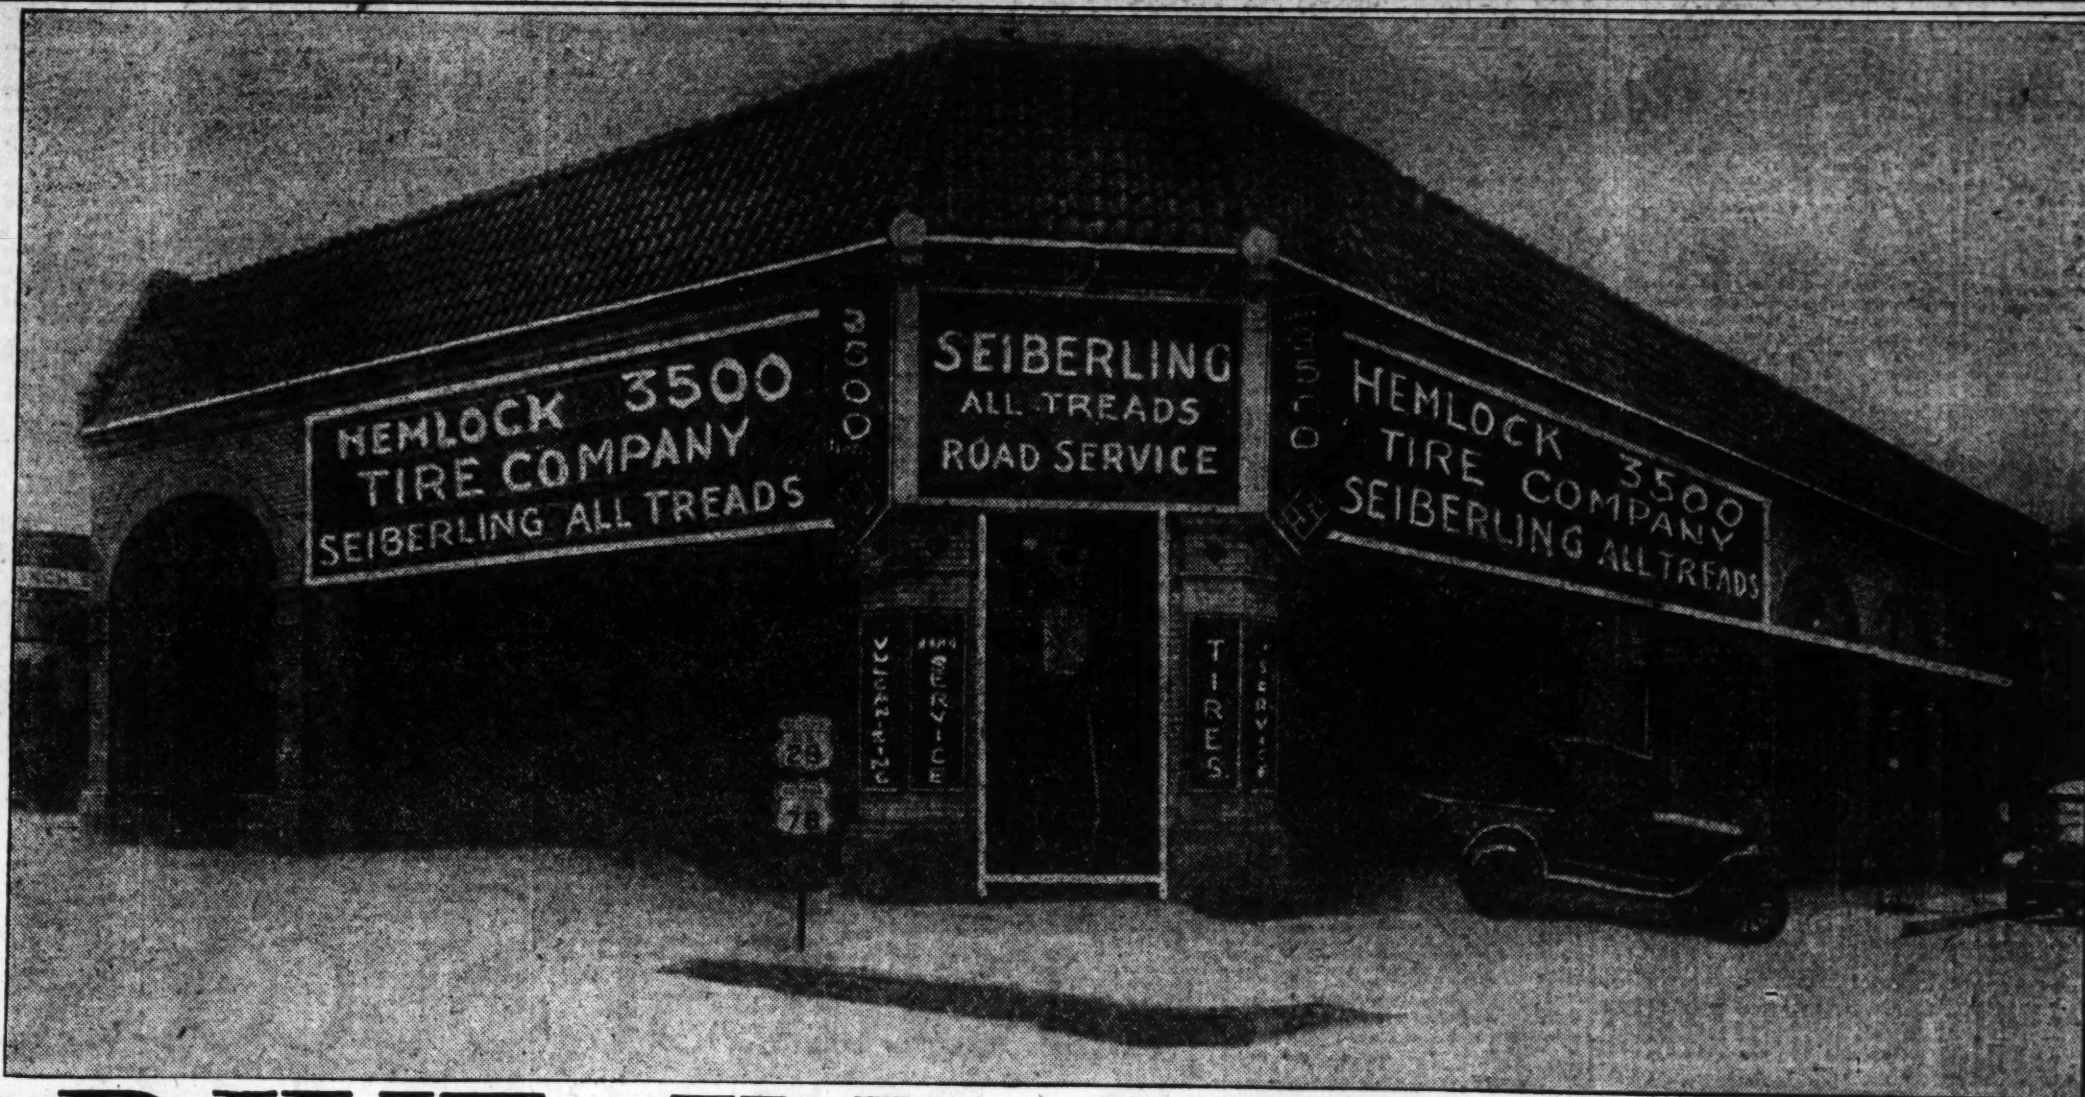

"The Six Six Custom Brongham and The President are powered by the same motor which recently drove the Studebaker 'Sheriff' from New York to San Francisco through hazy conditions and weather conditions in 36 hours and 20 minutes—six hours and twenty-five minutes faster than the fastest train schedule. The automotive world is still talking about this record of performance. Standard Six Custom Sedan is powered by the Standard Six motor, rated by the Society of Automotive Engineers as the most powerful engine used in any car of its size and weight.

"And as for endurance—the record of the Studebaker 100,000-mile club already includes the names of nearly 1,000 owners who have driven their Studebaker cars from 100,000 to half a million miles—and the list is growing every day as more veterans are discovered."

Safety Council Starts Drive "JAY WALKERS DIPLOMAS" FOR CARELESS PEDESTRIANS To Lessen Traffic Accidents

An intensive campaign to place before the public the startling facts of traffic accidents by the Atlanta Safety Council will be launched today.

The Atlanta safety council will sponsor the campaign and official Atlanta, the Junior Chamber of Commerce and business houses will cooperate. Although the drive will last only one week, those in charge hope to reach every Atlanta effectively during that time. Joe H. Reed is chairman of a committee of 17 who will have direct charge of the crusade.

Careful thought has been given the question and the effort is expected to bring more real results than any campaign yet launched in Atlanta. The drive will be to place a "jay-walker's diploma" on the rear of every automobile. The diploma will be given to those pedestrians who walk carelessly past traffic signals, violate other traffic rules in walking or fail to walk carefully in traffic. The diplomas will be given out by the Boy Scouts who will be stationed at downtown corners.

The diploma reads: "You are a jay-walker. When you cross streets carelessly, jay-walkers who cross in the middle of the block, or against signals, endanger themselves. Twenty-nine were killed last year. Fifteen killed since January 1, 1926. Cross crossing—carefully."

I hereby promise that I will—
Obey traffic regulations,
Watch out for CHILDREN and pedestrians, and Drive SAFELY at all times.

So that the LOSS OF LIFE and the PAIN and SUFFERING caused by carelessness may be stopped and the streets of Atlanta made SAFE for my family and my friends.

GET YOURSELF A BRAND NEW LIVER

How Dodson's Liver Tonic
Makes You Feel the Old Liver is Born Again.

Just off the slant of Old Piedmont where it rolls away into the foothills of South Georgia, Bud Evans makes a good stand of cotton. A year ago he was too sick to even follow a plow. His right side seemed hard, felt as if his liver had turned to stone; heached gas all the time; couldn't hold up his head for the pain; calomel just turned him inside out. You couldn't imagine anyone sicker than Bud Evans. It just happened that an egg buyer dropped in on him one day and says: "What you need, Bud, is a dose of Dodson's Liver Tonic. Your liver is baked and full up so it doesn't work." And so Bud got a bottle at the town drug store for a few cents. The very first night it loosened up so much sour bile and fermenting food that the swelling went down, his whole system righted itself and he was a man entirely before noon.

There is no question but that Dodson's Liver Tonic will do more for bilious people than anything else ever known. It works easily and smoothly, without gripe or distress, and cleans out all the s... bile and sickening stuff that gives you headache, nausea, vomiting, bilious fever and all the other distresses due to obstinate constipation.

Get one bottle of Dodson's Liver Tonic, and if it doesn't make you feel like you had traded your old, worn-out liver for a new one full of pep, go to the druggist and he will refund the price.—(adv.)

OWENBY QUILTS RACE FOR LEGISLATURE

Yester Mr. Owenby, Atlanta attorney, Saturday afternoon announced withdrawal of his candidacy to succeed Miss Bessie Kempton as a member of the Fulton county delegation in the state legislature.

"There are times in every life when one must choose between the call of ambition and the sense of duty. On account of unexpected and unforeseen difficulties of a personal nature, I am at this time forced to withdraw from the race for the Georgia state legislature to succeed Miss Bessie Kempton," Mr. Owenby said.

"I wanted very much to serve the people of Fulton county in the legislature. I believe those for whom government is intended know best and ought to say how they should be governed through a representative who can truly feel and realize that he is a servant of the people," he continued.

"I take this opportunity to thank those who have labored tirelessly in the interest of my candidacy. Your efforts were not unappreciated. I assure you. I am ready and willing at all times to serve my countrymen and fellowmen as best I can, but I feel at this time that I can best serve as a private citizen," he concluded.

SWEET POTATO CROP PROFITABLE AT LYONS

BY C. G. GARNER.

Lyons, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)—The Big Stem Jersey sweet potato crop in Toombs county reads like fiction.

The Big Stem Jerseys as a farm crop for Toombs county started in 1921, when J. G. Duncan, of Ellabeth City, N. C., visited his son, Rev. W. L. Duncan, pastor of the Nazareth church at Johnson Corner, 12 miles south of Lyons. At that time he was in the process of establishing this crop in Georgia but with no success. Failure was partly due to the fact that the seed sweet potatoes would not keep after a long shipment.

Finally Mr. Duncan had 80 barrels of seed potatoes shipped from his North Carolina home to Lyons by express. They arrived in good condition and he bedded these in hot-beds as he was accustomed to do in North Carolina and secured a supply of slips. These were planted by several farmers in the community and they shipped one car late in July. Prices, while not so high as might have been expected, were good.

The next year Rev. W. L. Duncan purchased a farm three miles from Lyons and planted these sweets himself. He and his neighbors shipped three cars in 1922. In 1923 they shipped six cars. In 1924 22 cars. In 1925 110 cars were shipped. This year the total has already exceeded that number and is still climbing. In one week, that of July 10, Toombs county shipped 41 cars of Big Stems, while the week preceding they shipped 14 cars. Thus the shipments from this county are well on the way to a new record.

The Toombs county shipments this year are being handled through the Toombs County Sweet Potato Growers' association, which is a local association and which has contracted with the federated fruit and vegetable growers to sell their sweets as have the Valdosta growers. This is the same sales organization which is handling the watermelons for the Sowers Watermelon Growers' Association of South Georgia.

Shipments up to Saturday night, July 24, totaled 100 cars for this entire section, which gives an idea of the volume of the industry in this section. It is thought that the entire section will be under one distributing agency next year. The prices, however, have held up wonderfully well with the exception of a few days when too many cars reached Philadelphia.

Farmers Pleased. Farmers locally are well pleased with the crop. Some are not making a yield that would be profitable at any reasonable price but others are making as high as 45 barrels to the acre. Among these are C. M. Smith, N. W. Smith, Lonnie Usher and others. They are clearing around $200 per acre as they shipped in the earliest cars.

This crop will, this year, total close to $250,000, where six years ago it was only $1,000. In addition to that, the growers shipped eight cars of Floridians which brought a total of $10,000. Shipments of these will continue heavily until the early crop is moved, and it is expected to total around 25 cars.

The Big Stem Jersey is a very dry, meaty sweet potato and not liked by the southern trade, although one southern city took one large car at a good price. The bulk of the crop moves to northern and middle markets and must be dug and sold before the North Carolina section starts shipping as they put such a heavy supply on the market as to break it below the profit for Georgia farmers.

North Carolina is then followed by eastern shore Virginia, who average shipping $2,000 cars from August 15 until the last of December.

"NEW WORLD" SUBJECT OF SUNDAY LECTURE

E. B. Sheffield, of New York, will lecture on "The New World Beginning" at 11 o'clock Sunday morning in the International Bible Students' association hall. The purpose of the address is to call attention to many evidences that are said to confirm the statement that a new order is now being ushered in.

The new order is that referred to in the Bible as the coming of God's kingdom under which His will shall be done among men, it was stated.

Plans Completed for Park As Burial Ground for Negroes

Plans for the development of Lincoln Memorial park, a cemetery park for negroes, have been completed by white and colored citizens of Atlanta and the promotion work is now under way, it was announced Saturday. The new park is located four miles from Five Points on Simpson road and it is to be developed on a plan which is different from any other cemetery plan yet used, it was stated.

Lincoln Memorial park is a burying ground for negroes, yet differs from the ordinary cemetery in several distinctive features. In it all monuments, tombstones, mounds and copings are eliminated. Each interment is perfectly identified by a marker of Georgia granite twelve by twenty-four inches, surface laid flush with the grass. Another feature is its perpetual endowment plan.

Officers of the Lincoln Memorial park are H. A. Etheridge, president; E. A. Sims, vice president; A. C. McHan, secretary-treasurer; M. M. Davies, W. H. Wellborn, the Rev. E. P. Johnson, Rev. P. James Bryant and Rev. A. D. Williams, directors. H. L. Albert is director of sales and development.

Lincoln Memorial park is sponsored by about 20 leading white citizens of Atlanta and an equal number of leading negroes. It is planned to provide a cemetery for negroes which will be the only thing of its kind for their race in the world.

Under the park plan the entire cemetery will be built with the idea that the whole grounds will be the memorial to the dead. Under this plan, in place of tombstones, markers, monuments and urns, a beautiful lawn surface will be created and with un-pearance will be perpetuated. The provision for perpetual endowment calls for the setting aside of a certain percentage of the price of each lot as an endowment fund. This endowment fund is to be held and administered by a bank and trust company. The principal will be invested in diversified securities yielding an high rate of interest as is consistent with safety, and only the interest will be paid over to the directors semi-annually for the upkeep of the place.

The perpetual care of burial grounds for white people has been provided for in this way in a number of cases but this is said to be the only instance on record of a similar provision in the case of a negro burial ground.

The location and topography of Lincoln Memorial park are ideal for the purposes. It is located in a sparsely populated neighborhood, on a paved road and about four miles from the center of the city. The land, consisting of 34 acres, rises in a gentle slope from Simpson road. It is well wooded and a never-failing stream traverses the property along the highway. An imposing entrance and bridge over the stream have just been completed.

Taking it all in all, the counterfeiting of francs on a huge scale in Hungary is quite a compliment to the franc.

DIVISION OF GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION

RALPH A. PARKER, Pres.
ATLANTA, GA.

There have been many golden periods in Cadillac's quarter century of pre-eminence among the fine cars of the world—but never a time when Cadillac was so unmistakably the Standard of the World as now. How completely Cadillac dominates the high-priced field is conclusively proven by Cadillac's unprecedented gain in the past 12 months—when sales increased 87.5% over the preceding year.

Cadillac Now Offers 50 Body Styles and Types

Five Hundred Color and Upholstery
Combinations, Many Exclusive to Cadillac

To its supremacy in the realm of value and performance, which of necessity will remain unequalled for long years to come, Cadillac now achieves pre-eminence in distinction, luxury and individuality.

50 different body types and styles, many of them exclusive and not to be duplicated, are announced for the coming year.

In combination with the widest selection of body types and styles ever presented by one manufacturer, Cadillac offers five hundred body color combinations and an unexampled range of upholstery selections.

Here is a manufacturing advance literally more important than any other development since Cadillac introduced the 90-degree eight-cylinder motor.

Here is an achievement in individualized service to fine car buyers which has never before been approached, and which only Cadillac is today able to offer. Throughout its years of leadership, Cadillac has never accomplished a greater feat than this solution of the problem of individual color selections.

The complete Cadillac line—including the standard models, the distinguished Fisher custom-built series, and the finest and most luxurious exclusive creations of Fleetwood—surpasses anything ever before attempted.

Cadillac today establishes itself on a new, high plane of skill and service which must inevitably add to the public acclaim that has rewarded Cadillac, in the past 12 months with the greatest success in the history of fine car manufacture.

NEW 90 DEGREE

1927 BUICK MODELS MAKE PUBLIC BOW

Many Mechanical and Comfort Improvements Are Brought Out.

The Buick for 1927 was designed, according to the Buick engineering department, to eliminate all objectionable noises and vibration so common in most automobiles.

In developing the car, all engine noises of an objectionable character were overcome. Noise in the transmission has also been minimized.

This was accomplished by designing an entirely new transmission for all models which gives smooth and silent operation at all speeds. These results were obtained through several different improvements.

Larger gears are used, which reduce the pressure on the teeth. New tooth forms were designed, which have more teeth in contact, giving a smooth, rolling action and eliminating gear clatter. The transmission case was designed especially to dampen gear hum. The counter gears are forged in one piece, adding to the quietness of operation.

A large and positive pilot gives correct alignment between the engine and transmission. The transmission bell housing and flywheel housing have been strongly reinforced. The result is positive alignment among all units, which eliminates clutch rattle, clutch release bearing noise and gear noise.

In 1927 Buicks are equipped with balanced wheels. The Buick engineering department claims that this feature gives exceptionally smooth riding at all speeds.

It can be noted by placing a car on jacks that the wheels have a heavy side where the valve stems are placed. When the wheels are revolving at speed on the road, this heavy side hits the road with greater force, causing uneven rolling and often very noticeable jolting. This is liable to be very uncomfortable to the occupants of the car.

By counter-balancing the extra weight of the valve, Buick engineers have further eliminated this bouncing of the wheels. The balanced wheels in conjunction with coilover springs make the new Buicks hug the road at all speeds.

Buick engineers have eliminated one most annoying of closed car conditions.

The Buick vacuum ventilator, which prevents crankcase dilution and makes a change of oil necessary only four times a year, serves another important function which will be appreciated by drivers of closed cars.

The ventilator carries off all fumes from the engine and expels them through the ejector tube underneath the car, eliminating the nuisance and danger to health which is caused by these fumes getting inside a closed body.

Breather tubes are usually employed to carry off these fumes. The absence of sufficient draught and the location of the breathers often allows the passenger compartment to become filled with unpleasant, and often dangerous gases.

The Buick vacuum ventilator sucks all fumes out of the crankcase with a draught created by the fan, and expels them at the front end, away from the body and well below the frame. There is no possibility of these fumes entering the body of the car.

In addition to the engineering and experimental forces of the Buick Motor company, a large service engineering staff is also maintained. This staff plays an important part in keeping Buick cars abreast of public requirements.

The service engineering staff keeps in personal touch with all the large branches, distributors and dealers. These in turn keep a constant check on all their sub-dealers and service clinics are constantly being held throughout the country.

In this way the service engineers carry accurate data to the engineering department, keeping them informed as to the operation of more than a million Buick cars in the hands of owners. The work done by this department accounts in a large measure for the constant improvement in Buick models from year to year.

This department, in cooperation with the engineering and experimental departments, is continually searching for the things which could be made better. Much of the work done to improve the Buick car is a direct result of this department's activity.

The instrument board and lighting system in the 1927 Buicks are designed to give the maximum in driving comfort, especially at night.

The instruments are indirectly lighted, preventing night driving with dash light glare in the eyes of the driver. The speedometer, oil gauge, ammeter, etc., are lighted by diffused rays which originate in a light behind the dash. A strong beam falls on the transmission lock, making it easy to lock or unlock the car at night.

The speedometer is placed directly under the eyes of the driver, so that an easy reading can be had with a minimum loss of attention to the road.

On the 128-inch wheelbase Deluxe models, a dash temperature indicator is included as standard equipment. The temperature reading is taken directly from the engine and is the most accurate possible to obtain. It is fully visible at night.

Controllable beam headlights, which retain their full strength at all times but prevent glare in the eyes of an approaching motorist, are standard equipment on all models. The headlight control lever is mounted on the steering post within easy reach of the driver.

Thermostatic water control in the 1927 Buicks fulfills several important functions.

Under severe weather conditions it causes the engine to warm up within three minutes to a temperature of 120 degrees, which is above the temperature at which crankcase dilution occurs.

This quick warm-up renders unnecessary excessive use of the choke, thus saving gasoline and helping prevent crankcase dilution, which is further prevented by the vacuum ventilator, another Buick feature for 1927.

By closing and blocking the water circulation when the engine temperature drops below 120 degrees the thermostat maintains a constant efficient operating temperature in the engine. When the car is driven and warmed up, and then parked, the thermostat closes and keeps the engine warm for a long period of time, thus preventing numerous cold starts.

With the aid of thermostatic water control crankcase dilution has been reduced in the 1927 Buicks so that it is necessary to completely change oil only four times a year.

Rumble in closed cars has been one of the chief objections to this body type. Buick engineers have eliminated it from the closed Buicks for 1927.

Live rubber insulates the body of the car from all outside influences which might cause noise. The engine is suspended at all three points of contact with the frame in heavy rubber insulators. The engine has been made smooth and quiet at all speeds with a complete absence of vibration periods. This, in addition to the rubber case mounting, prevents any

G. L. BAKER.

Word was received from officials of the Champion Spark Plug company of Toledo, Ohio, of the winning of their national change your spark plug week stunts by G. L. Baker, southeastern representative of the company, located in Atlanta.

Mr. Baker's stunts, pulled through out his territory, were voted the most outstanding in competition with their representatives from every section of the country.

Last year Mr. Baker was awarded second place and the announcement of his selection for first honors this year gives him the distinction of finishing one, two, three for the last three years, a record for other representatives to shoot at.

NEW BUICKS ARE ALL THAT IS CLAIMED

BY H. MCCOY VAN DEVENDER,
Automobile Editor, Atlanta Constitution.

The new Buicks for 1927 are now on display in the show rooms of both D. C. Black, local Buick dealer, and at the showrooms of the Buick factory branch located at the corner of Spring street and Baltimore block.

There are sixteen body styles, mounted on chassis lengths of 114-1-2, 120 and 128 inches. The line is made up of four sport type open cars and twelve closed cars.

Perhaps one of the biggest mechanical improvements announced this season is found in the new 1927 models that were put on display for the first time Saturday.

In designing these new creations Buick engineers have certainly accomplished their goal. While the body lines are no different from those of 1926, very practical improvements have been made from a standpoint of both appearance and comfort.

Outstanding mechanical improvements noted are the counter balanced crankshaft, vacuum cleaned crank case, larger and heavier fly wheel, larger and heavier transmission gears, lighter pistons and torsion balancer.

The problem of vibration coming to motors of the past at certain speeds has been solved. The new motor has a counter balanced four bearing crankshaft with lighter piston and an exclusive Buick creation called the torsion balancer.

Counter weight are used to keep the crankshaft from deflecting. They also balance the shaft so perfectly that there is no high bearing pressure or whipping out of line, which are the main causes of engine rumble, noise and roughness.

Any crankshaft, no matter how scientifically worked out, has a period of torsional vibration. The torsion balancer absorbs the tendency of the shaft to twist under the power impulses and delivers these impulses back to the shaft after the piston forces are spent. In this manner it iron out vibration periods and gives the engine a smooth flow of power throughout the speed range. The light pistons and heavy fly wheel help obtain these results.

At last automotive engineers have devised a means that the oil can be kept clean from gas fumes and water. This is accomplished moving parts which makes the crankshaft absolutely void of dilution and gives the oil an opportunity to keep its heavy body indefinitely.

The transmission and gear noises have been greatly reduced by the use of giant gear teeth and by an improved mounting of the transmission case to the engine. The new hum. The transmission housing and the flywheel housing have been very materially reinforced which prevents distortion. The result is positive alignment among all units, which eliminates all clutch rattles, clutch release bearing noise and gear noise.

While the graceful body lines follow closely the 1926 Buicks there are a few minor changes noted particularly in the closed models, that give the 1927 Buicks a new low graceful appearance.

In the interior nothing is left to be desired. The upholstery is new and luxurious, the appointments most fitting and complete.

All of the models come finished in Duco of pleasing combinations the colors have been so selected and arranged that they give every appearance of a custom built car. These cars are no longer to be known as the Standard and Master models but will be designated as model 115, model 120 and model Buick quality as in the past and the only difference noted is the size of wheelbase and chassis.

All of their models will be on special display all of this week and the automobile loving public owe it to themselves to drop around to one of the Buick showrooms and see first hand, Buick's greatest car.

engine noise in the interior of the car. The frame, often transmits road rumble through to the body, but this cannot pass the rubber barriers in the new Buicks. This silence in the interiors of the cars is aided by quiet operating mechanism throughout the chassis, which starts with the balanced engine and includes silent valve operation, new, giant gears and gear teeth to reduce hum and a muffler and exhaust system designed especially to keep all noise out of the body of the car.

MAKING SQUARE INCH LOOK LIKE AN ACRE

To the casual observer, there isn't much human nature in a piece of steel or brass. But metals really have personalities, widely different characteristics under the surface, apparent to the expert.

Chemical analysis affords accurate figures on the amounts of various elements in steel, for instance, but yields no information as to the distribution, shape or size of the carbide particles or size of the grain, characteristics which greatly influence the physical properties of steel. Heat treatment, such as the White Motor company uses in manufacturing trucks and buses, does not change the amount of these particles in a given piece of steel but it varies the size, shape and distribution of particles to achieve the degree of hardness desired. Physical tests show the effect of these variables but it takes the metallurgical microscope to measure size and shape and location so that heat treatment may be prescribed. The White company uses such a microscope, imported from Vienna, Austria, the higher magnification lenses of which make it possible to see distinctly 140,000 lines per inch on any specimen under observation. One square inch could be made to look like an acre of land if such a large piece could be observed all at once.

BIG PECAN CROP SEEN IN GEORGIA

Albany, Ga., July 31.—(P)—After a period of uncertainty, occasioned by a new pest, unfavorable weather conditions, and other outside agencies, pecan growers in southwest Georgia are breathing easy again and are anticipating a large pecan crop. A survey recently conducted here showed that the 1926 crop will be in excess of that of 1925, which was in itself one of the largest ever harvested.

This condition was said here to be unusual, since two bumper crops seldom follow each other. A large yield one year, as a rule, means a small harvest the next.

The nuts have successfully survived the period during which the nut case-borer, principal enemy, inflicts its damage, and are reported safe from any further damage by this pest. The leaf case-borer appeared in this section for the first time this year, and at first caused considerable alarm among pecan growers, but with the aid of government entomologists, this menace was eliminated.

Rains during the past few weeks have given assurance of ample moisture, nuts are well set on the trees and present indications are that farmers of southwest Georgia will reap large financial returns from the pecan industry.

Reception Committee on Twenty-Fifth Birthday of Air-Cooling

On July 4 the Franklin organization celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of air cooling by staging 135 low-gear runs in various parts of the county, also with elaborate ceremonies at the Franklin factory at Syracuse.

Service badges were awarded to 64 factory employees who had been associated with the company 20 years or more. Chancellor Charles W. Flint, of Syracuse university, was the chief speaker. Chancellor Flint, President H. H. Franklin, and the reception committee are shown in the above photograph. Reading from left to right, the men in the photograph are Ralph Murphy, general manager; A. E. Parsons, director; A. M. Taylor, advertising manager; J. E. Walker, purchasing agent; Charles W. Flint, chancellor Syracuse university; F. J. Leyerle, service manager; H. H. Franklin, president; S. E. Ackerman, sales manager; H. H. Goodhart, distribution manager; F. A. Barton, secretary and treasurer; William Dunk, production manager; Charles L. ment of Hollis Fort and A. E. Hines. Ambitious Times-Recorder, had announced as a candidate. Fort has long been politically prominent in this section, being a son of the late Judge Allen Fort, of Americus, and one of the best known lawyers practicing at the Sumter county bar. Hines is a railroad engineer and farmer, and has represented Sumter county in the legislature during six years past. Eve, in addition to being editor of the local daily paper, has taken much interest in the upbuilding of Americus and Sumter county.

ST. MARYS PLANS TO KEEP COWS OFF STREETS AT NIGHT

St. Marys, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)—The St. Marys Chamber of Commerce has planned many improvements for the city, one of the most important being the proper grading and draining of the streets. Important resolutions were passed at the last meeting, which will be brought before the attention of the mayor and the city council at their next meeting.

Resolutions call for condemnation of old houses; to have cows removed from the streets at night, and to have zoning and restriction laws passed and enforced.

The chamber expects to work on a large plan this fall and to try and advertise St. Marys as an all-around summer and winter resort, the weather and climatic conditions being wonderful the year round.

NAHUNTA MAN NAMED U. S. DEPUTY CLERK

Waycross, Ga., July 31.—(P)—Walter Thomas, of Nahunta, Ga., has been selected to fill the position of United States deputy clerk for the Waycross division of the new southern district of Georgia, United States court, an official announcement authorized by Scott A. Edwards, clerk of the southern district of Georgia, said.

Mr. Edwards recently was made district clerk, and in his hands rests the appointment of deputy clerks for the various divisions under his jurisdiction. Mr. Edwards' headquarters are in Savannah.

DIVERSIFIED CROPS PAY BARWICK FARMERS

BY C. I. MASSEY.

Barwick, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)—The story of the large number of carloads of farm products shipped from Barwick is a story of diversification and cooperation. Diversification was brought about when farmers realized that cotton was no longer king and a change was made to other crops. Diversification succeeded and cooperation was necessary when the problem of marketing the crops grown as result of diversification was faced.

A few years back when cotton was king, 100 cars of watermelons a season would have been considered a tremendous shipment from Barwick, and most of those at a loss to the grower. The 1926 season has just passed and there was shipped from Barwick 625 carloads of juicy Watson watermelons, which were sold at a profit to the grower.

These 625 cars if coupled together would have made a train nearly five miles in length and would have required the services of 16 mammoth locomotives to move them to market. If the melons in these 625 cars had been placed end to end they would reach from here almost to Atlanta, in fact approximately 217 miles, and if the melons had been cut in slices, 16 to the melon, 9,900,000 American citizens could have been served.

There has been shipped from Barwick since January 1, 1926, approximately 1,125,000 pounds of peanuts, mostly the small Spanish type, which is used in making peanut butter and in the manufacture of candies as well as sold over nearly every soda counter in the form of baked and salted stock and as fresh parched peanuts at 5 cents.

There has been shipped this year from Barwick approximately 25 carloads of cabbage, enough for a light trainload; Barwick has shipped and trucked to other points 10 carloads of snap beans and yellow crooked neck squash; Barwick shipped this season 10 cars of turnips.

A solid trainload of 20 cars of corn has been shipped from Barwick this season.

The miscellaneous shipments of sweet potatoes, castaloupe, cucumbers, tomatoes, green corn, carrots, etc., will probably reach 10 carloads as well as the shipments of 3,000,000 potato plants and 1,000,000 cabbage plants which proves the Barwick section is no longer depending on the one crop system of agriculture.

There was not a single carload of watermelons shipped from Barwick in 1926 that had not been graded and they were all marketed cooperatively.

We believe in cooperative marketing of farm produce around Barwick.

With the waning of the honey moon many a brave man begins to regret the failure of his faint-hearted rival.

SPRINGFIELD SCHOOL HAS SUCCESSFUL TERM

Sparta, Ga., July 31.—(Special.)—In 1923 a Smith-Hughes vocational department was added to the Springfield school, a leading agricultural and industrial institution for negro children in the state, located at Springfield, a community of negro citizens in the northern section of Hancock county, about 12 miles from Sparta.

The school was established about 15 years ago for the training of negro youths and girls in practical and theoretical agriculture and the problems of housewives, and to give definite instruction and assistance to adult farmers already engaged in farming pursuits.

E. G. Washington was placed in charge of the vocational work at the school by the state board of education and the Hancock county board of education, and he has just completed a report which shows the work of the vocational department to have been highly successful this year.

JORDAN WINS ECONOMY RUN

A Jordan Line Eight Playboy has just won the annual Lake Arrowhead, Cal., conservation run with an official average of 20 miles to the gallon of gas.

The test route is 90 miles long with a grueling climb toward the end.

"The run was made under a scorching sun which sent the thermometer up to 102 degrees in the shade through Waterman canyon," said Edward S. Jordan, president of the Jordan Motor Car company.

The car, driven by its owner, Mr. George P. Wiggins, in addition to using only four and a half gallons of gas, used only one pint of oil and only five pints of water.

"This performance was an eye-opener for many people who had an impression that an eight cylinder car was necessarily extravagant from an upkeep standpoint."

OAKLAND SHATTERS PRODUCTION RECORD

Four important records were shattered during July by the Oakland Motor Car company. Two were world's records for the industry on Pontiac Six production and two were Oakland's own records for Oakland Six production and fiscal year production.

Since January 1, through July 26, more than 89,000 Pontiac Six cars have been produced and distributed to dealers—not only establishing a new world's record for the industry for a new make of car for a corresponding period of time, but also exceeding the largest production ever attained by any new make of car during its first full year.

Oakland-Pontiac production figures are synonymous with sales because production has never caught up with sales since the introduction of the new cars last January.

Ever since the industry began, motor car manufacturers have been staggering the public's mind by stupendous feats of production, but never before has any manufacturer of a new make of car won such nation wide preference or demand and been able to accomplish such amazing production in so short a time. This record, many believe, can hardly be equalled.

Yet with all this Oakland has rounded out its greatest fiscal year on July 31, during which the sales of the Oakland Six have more than doubled during the last 12 months, exceeding by several thousand cars the largest previous year in its history for Oakland Six alone.

The total production for the fiscal year, ending July 31, exceeded more than 100,000 cars.

At the present time a daily production of 450 cars is being kept up on the Pontiac Six pending the completion of the new $7,600,000 factory which will permit a production of 1,000 of these cars a day. This places Oakland in eighth place in production and sales among motor car manufacturers of the world.

The phenomenal rise of Oakland during the past 18 months as recorded in achievements, advances and success is epochal and executives of the company credit it to the outstanding character of the two lines of six-cylinder cars offered.

EVER SEE WHAT IS INSIDE YOUR HEAD?

Automobile engines are like men in one important characteristic—their success is largely determined by what is inside their heads.

That's just why the Paige-Detroit Motor Car company employs a battery of costly automatic machines to insure that what's inside the cylinder heads of Paige engines shall be just exactly right.

It is a common practice in auto manufacture to leave the inside of the combustion chambers in the cylinder head just as they come from the foundry. In other words, the surface of the casting is not altered.

Paige practice, on the other hand, is to machine the combustion chamber carefully over all surfaces—the side walls and the top—the operation being held within a variation of one-thousandth of an inch.

Smoothness of these surfaces is a desirable feature, but the main object of the machine operation is not to finish the surface so much as to insure that the chambers shall be of exactly the desired volume. The new Paige engines were designed to operate with a certain compression ratio. If the volume of the combustion chamber varied, different engines would have different compression ratios; whether too high or too low, these engines would fall short of the ideal operating conditions and their performance would not be up to the high standards set for them.

When the variation is held to the close limits maintained in Paige engines, then proper operation and maximum efficiency are assured.

This machine operation, in addition, has other advantages to the owner, as compared with the rough surface of a plain casting. The Paige combustion chamber surface is so smooth that it greatly retards the forming of carbon deposits; and when carbon does accumulate it is much easier to remove.

Furthermore, the uniformity in thickness of the cylinder head means better cooling, so that the engine may be maintained at its most efficient temperature.

FRENCH MOVIE STAR SELECTS PEERLESS PHAETON

The experience of a salesman exhibiting the Peerless Six-50 sport phaeton at the Los Angeles Automobile show typifies the appeal which this car makes to those who appreciate beauty of line and attractive coloring.

The Peerless booth attracted the attention of Miss Nora Miestro, beautiful French actress who recently came to California. The salesman tells the story of the sale.

"She came rushing up to the Peerless booth and demanded to be shown 'the newest Peerless.' We showed her all of them but her fancy was caught by the Six-50 sport phaeton.

"Zat one I weel take," she said and promptly sat down to write a check. She didn't inspect the car for more than 15 minutes and she was all for stopping the show while we wheeled the car out of the booth and to the street. We explained that we couldn't get the car out right at that moment but would have it for her early next morning. And so, in spite of the fact that this car was the identical one shown at the New York and Chicago shows and had been in the Los Angeles show only three days, we took it from the booth and gave it to her the next day."

The car's appearance together with the proven quality of the Six-50 motor has won it wide popularity wherever it has been shown. Undoubtedly it is one of the most popular cars of its type on the market.

CHRYSLER TO HAVE FOUR COMPLETE LINES

What is regarded as one of the most important announcements made in the motor car industry in years is a statement issued at Detroit by Walter P. Chrysler, motor car manufacturer, that the company of which he is the head will definitely proceed with the manufacture of four complete lines of cars of standardized quality to cover the four greatest markets.

What this plan means, according to Mr. Chrysler, is the building of four quality cars, each the finest in its price division, under one name, by one manufacturing organization, in one group of plants and marketed through one unified distributing organization.

It further means, he says, millions of dollars to the motor car buying public because of the greater dollar value which the plan makes possible. The statement of Mr. Chrysler was in reference to the new four-cylinder car with which he will invade the lower price field in a short time.

"As we are entirely dependent for the success of our product on the attitude of the public toward it, I have always felt that the public is entitled to know the details of our plans and aims."

"I am frank to say that it has been my ambition for years to standardize quality in the manufacture of a group of motor cars, produced by the coordinated efforts of one organization, but designed adequately to meet the wants and desires of the different groups into which the buying public is divided."

"When the last word is said, public demand in motor cars is determined by economic factors—and by the use and value of the car. In other words, people buy the sort of car which will render them the service they require at the price they can afford to pay."

"It is my belief that they have now reached the point that no matter what the price may be, the car must come up to certain standards of size, comfort, performance and economy if it is to win and hold public confidence and approval."

"In the past, where one manufacturer has produced cars in different classes, these have been as separate units, thus losing to the manufacturer the efficiencies and economies which should result from group manufacture."

"But under our plan of standardized quality, we not only have all the resources and facilities of our great plants coordinated and functioning at one factory, but we have engineering under unified control and all of our activities, right through to the distribution to the public, working together to the one end of giving the greatest possible value in every class."

"This plan of standardized quality has been definitely shaping itself since we first announced the Chrysler '70' two and a half years ago. We proceeded a long step on the way in the presentation of the Chrysler Imperial '80' and went still further in this direction with the Chrysler lighter, lower-priced '90'. Now we come to the final step in the process with the production of a four-cylinder car in the lower price field."

"We are confident that when this new car is definitely placed before the public it will receive the same enthusiastic reception that has been accorded our other cars."

"Each of these cars will remain a separate identity, delivering separate and individual qualities of performance, but by grouping of purchase power and manufacturing facilities, all four enjoy engineering development and standardized practice, with pronounced lowering of overhead—all of which is to the advantage of the buyer."

"The history of the past in the automotive industry has largely revolved around the idea of fixing a low price to compel a large volume."

"Under our plan of standardized quality the idea is to utilize every possible economy in the production of four cars covering the entire market, and by these economies, produce such obvious and manifest value that volume will follow as a natural consequence."

A reduction of thirty hours in flying time of airmail service between New York and Los Angeles has recently been brought about by the establishment of a new commercial air route between Los Angeles and Salt Lake City. This new mail service is operated by the Western Air Express, Incorporated.

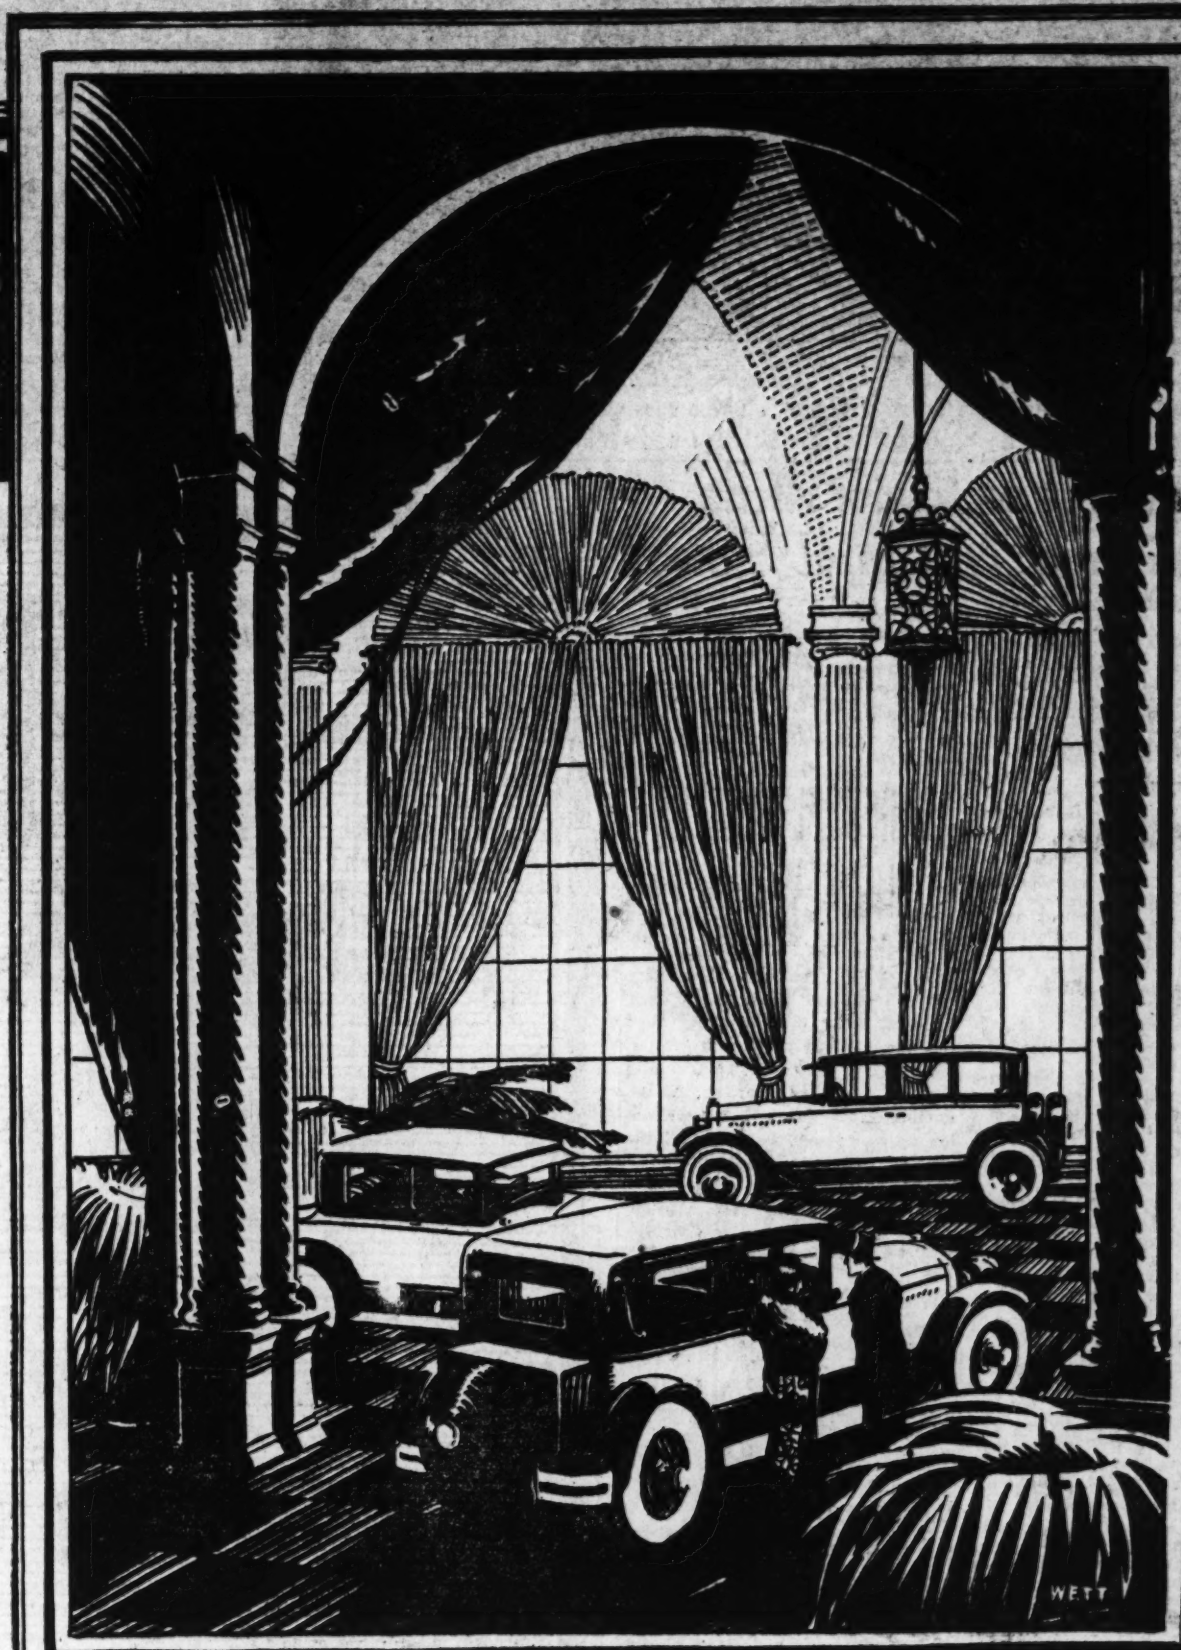

This company has equipped itself with seven Douglas mail planes, having a cruising speed of 116 miles, a cruising radius of 1,000 miles and a mail capacity of 1,000 pounds. In addition, the Western Air Express maintains a fleet of Dodge trucks as auxiliary equipment.

These Dodges are lubricated with Pennzoid which has been so satisfactory as a lubricant for the airmail fleet that it was also specified for the motor cars used by the Western Air Express. According to Major C. G. Kennedy, vice president in charge of operations.

Fisher—the greatest body builder in the world—stands head and shoulders above all others in quality. The new General Motors cars all help to prove Fisher leadership.

OLDEST FRANKLIN IS BEING SOUGHT

During the month of July, which marks the 25th anniversary of the Franklin car, Franklin dealers from coast to coast are endeavoring to locate in their territories the oldest Franklin under registration and in service in the hands of owners.

Early reports to the factory indicate that some remarkable records are going to be established in the company's endeavor to find the oldest Franklin in service in the United States.

Franklin 10 years old are considered quite youthful, only one car as recent as 1915 having been reported up to the middle of the month. Contenders for the honor of having the oldest Franklin still in operation range back of 1910, with a few of the vintage of 1907, one of 1905 and one of 1904 already reported.

In starting this contest the company announced that it was not making any distinction as to the class of service the car was in; that is, if it had been converted into a truck, it could still be counted in the contest.

Among other entrants reported is one of the more than ordinary historical interest inasmuch as it is the identical Franklin which in 1904 was used by L. J. Whitman and C. S. Carr to establish a trans-continental record, on which occasion they cut the best previous time ever made by an automobile in half.

HUDSON-ESSEX OPERATE LARGEST BODY PLANT

The automobile industry's largest single body-building unit and not a single body-builder employed in it! That is the unique situation in the $10,000,000 body plant which the Hudson Motor Car company has erected to manufacture its new all-steel Essex coaches.

Yet the accuracy and the finish of the work done on these bodies by modern machinery is described by the industry's experts as actually superior to that of the hand-working body artisans. And more than that, the Hudson organization makes the flat out statement that the new Essex coach body is as rugged and long-lived a body as can be found in the world, price regardless. "Rigid as a steel building," is a phrase describing it.

"The men employed in this Essex plant are of fine types of working men as America affords," said C. H. Becker, vice president of the Goldsmith Becker company, Hudson-Essex distributor, "but they are modern in that they let mammoth machines perform the heaviest and most complicated tasks."

"In the manufacture of a cowl, a door, or one corner of the body, for instance, the most vital operation is performed by plant presses. A whole cowl is pressed out by one tremendous blow. The cost of the big machine which does this represents a fortune. Probably the dies themselves cost from $10,000 to $15,000. In all the manufacturing the machine probably has at its command $75,000 to $100,000 worth of facilities. The weight of the machinery is more than 180 tons; the plunger to the press exerts a force of 400 tons."

LUCY COBB FACULTY ADDS TWO MEMBERS

Athens, Ga., July 31.—(AP)—Two additions to the faculty of Lucy Cobb institute here have been announced by President W. F. Hollingsworth. Miss Ethel Byrd, who has both the bachelor of arts and master of arts degrees from Winthrop college, South Carolina, who studied two summers at the University of California, and who has had five years' experience as a teacher, will teach science at Lucy Cobb in the place of Miss Mildred McCain, resigned.

Miss Mary J. Garrett, bachelor of arts graduate of the Mississippi-Woman's college, who studied two summers at the University of Virginia, and who has had four years' experience as a teacher, will be in charge of high school Latin at Lucy Cobb. Miss Garrett was head of the Latin department at Blackston college, Virginia, last year.

ATHENS SUMMER SCHOOL ENDS 1926 SESSION

Athens, Ga., July 31.—(AP)—With an enrollment of 2,104 students, said by Director J. S. Stewart to be the largest in the history of the institution, the six weeks' session of the University of Georgia summer school came to a close today.

Though many of the students are leaving Athens following the close of the six weeks' courses, about 600 will remain for the nine weeks' session, which comes to a close, Saturday, August 21, it was said.

Officials of the university expressed satisfaction with the success of the 1926 summer session, and stated that the marked success of the recent music festival week, in which leading opera were sung by leading stars, assured another season of grand opera for northeast Georgia at the summer session next year.

Riverside Academy Wins Highest National Honor

Gainesville Institution Is Designated Leading School of Kind in Entire United States.

Another honor has come to Georgia for national leadership, it was revealed Saturday, when it was announced that Riverside Military academy, of Gainesville, has been designated the leading school of its kind in the country, following an inspection recently completed by a board of officers of the United States army appointed for this purpose. This honor was won by Riverside in competition with 50 other high class military academies located in all parts of the United States.

This comes on top of the honor Riverside has held for four years of being selected as one of the ten honor schools designated by the board of army inspectors as doing the best military work in the country. In the tests which won first place for Riverside in the inspections the school made a score of 96.09. The next schools were Kemper Military academy and Staunton Military academy.

Riverside Military academy is directed by Colonel Sandy Beavers, head of the institution. Under his leadership the school was the first school of its kind in Georgia to be named as one of the ten honor schools. The new honor is particularly gratifying to the school and to the people of Gainesville because it was won by the youngest school of its kind in the list of contestants, according to Colonel Beavers.

Stands High Academically. "The people of the south and especially the people of Georgia will no doubt learn with pride the story of the progress made by this Georgia institution in the last few years," Colonel Beavers said.

"Riverside Military academy is probably the youngest institution of its kind in the United States and is certainly the youngest in the state of Georgia. It now stands at the top of all military schools in the United States."

News of the designation of Riverside as the leading military academy was received in a communication from Brigadier General Milton F. Davis, president of the Association of Military Colleges and Schools.

Academically, no school in America has higher certification privileges than Riverside. The school makes a specialty of preparing cadets for entrance into the United States military in both institutions direct from the senior class without examination. Riverside cadets are accepted by every college and university in America using the certification method. Official records show that last year Riverside sent to colleges and universities a larger per cent of its graduating class than was sent by any other similar school in the country.

From Foreign Countries. Riverside now has students from 31 states and four foreign countries and in some cases the transportation expenses of the students to and from the school was larger than the tuition charged. For the last five years the school has not had an "empty bed" during the opening month of September.

When Riverside was first designated as an honor school in 1922 it was the first time such an honor was paid to a Georgia institution.

For four years the authorities of the school, supported by an enthusiastic student body have waged a fight to make Riverside the south's most distinguished military preparatory school and the recent honor reflects the thoroughness with which this fight was made.

New Buildings. Work is now in progress at Riverside on a new hospital building and an addition to the gymnasium. When finished will give Riverside an equipment which is unsurpassed by any similar school. The school now has large and complete barracks, fraternity houses, E. O. T. C. buildings and the south's largest preparatory school gymnasium.

Special attention is given athletics at Riverside and the team of that institution have made wonderful records recently. The ablest coaches and directors are employed to handle the teams. Every cadet is required to take an hour's workout daily in the gymnasium.

Preparations are now under way for the opening on September 15 and Colonel Beavers said all indications point to continued progress for the institution.

NEW ADVERTISING AND SALES HEAD JOINS PHILIBOSIAN

M. L. Shropshire, well and favorably known Atlanta, who has been identified for the past 12 years with the advertising and sales promotion departments of some of our leading firms, has recently been appointed director of sale and advertising for Stephen Philibosian company.

Mr. Shropshire is a graduate of the University of Georgia, a young man of pleasing personality, full of "pep" and enthusiasm, and a firm believer in newspaper advertising as the logical medium through which to reach the buying public.

"We've certainly got the store, the merchandise and the selling policy that ought to appeal to every thrifty, home-loving man and woman in Atlanta, and for this whole section of the south for that matter," stated Mr. Shropshire, "and I certainly mean to tell them about these advantages through the newspapers."

KNIGHT MOTOR BREAKS MILEAGE RECORD

Surpassing anything on record, a Knight motor has traveled 663,344 miles, or a distance equivalent to a round trip to the moon and halfway back again, according to information received by officials of the Willys-Overland company, Toledo.

It took 13 years of tough, strenuous, rugged service to pile up that amazing total, but that motor is still running and is wisely, hopefully, confidently winking at the million-mile goal just a few thousand miles ahead. Still full of stamina and endurance, this Knight motor, with its sleeve valves and sturdy pistons, is vigorously speeding here and there on calls of mercy for the Toronto General hospital in Toronto, Canada. It is the power plant for an ambulance, built by the Russell Motor Car company in 1913 and presented to the hospital as a gift by the late Sir John Eaton. It has been in continuous service twenty-four hours daily since that time, C. J. Decker, superintendent of the hospital, declares.

Decker's attention was first called to this record run when the head of the hospital's ambulance department suggested that the antiquated appearance and facilities of the ambulance would warrant the purchase of a new one.

ANNOUNCES HEALTH CENTERS FOR WEEK

Health centers will be held by Dr. J. P. Kennedy, city health officer, at the following places this week:

Tuesday, Adair school; Wednesday, Grant Park school; Thursday, Andrew Stewart nursery; and Friday, Pryor Street school. Each center will begin at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The tiresome orator tries to make up in length for his lack of depth.

You can say this for the statistics introduced into our aviation rows: They are extremely versatile.

PEERLESS

shows remarkable gain

so far this year

THINK of it! A gain of 264% in six months. This shows the enviable position of Peerless in the industry.

In Detroit, for instance—where the making of automobiles is the biggest industry—Peerless shows a gain of 371% for the first six months of this year over the same period of 1925. In Chicago, a gain of 337%—Pittsburg 309%.

Scores of other cities show similar records.

This means that Peerless value is recognized for what it actually is—the greatest dollar-for-dollar value in the automobile field, —that Peerless is a sound, growing company with a glorious past and a future that's unlimited, —that financially, Peerless is one of the most stable manufacturing concerns in America.

And the answer to the whole thing is, "giving the buyer a car that will go and come as surely as the rising and setting of the sun."

Think of being able to buy a car like the Peerless Six-80 for as little as $1395.

Think of a car like the big, powerful Peerless Six-72 for $1895—or the famous 90°V-type Eight-69 for $2995!

These are real values—values never before duplicated.

You'll find Peerless offers an unequalled opportunity for the man or the organization that can sell good cars.

CHARLES G. DAWES LEAVES ON FISHING TRIP IN COLORADO

Chicago, July 31.—(AP)—Intending to better his record catch of 100 trout in 10 days last summer, Vice President Charles G. Dawes left Chicago for Denver, whence he will go on a 10 day expedition to Wagon Wheel Gap, Colo., about 100 miles southwest of Denver.

The vice president in starting on his trip made no comment on a suggestion that he might outdo President

Charles, W. Va., July 31.—(AP) West Virginia's capital city is temporarily without daily newspapers, due to a strike of the composing room forces of the Gazette and Daily Mail. Adoption of the open shop plan in their typographical departments and resumption of publication in a few days was announced by the publishers today.

Under the old contract with the printers, which the publishers said they offered to renew, day men received $47, and night side workers $50 for a 48-hour week. An increase of $3.00 for day men and $5 for night men with a 44-hour week has been asked by the union. Proposals to submit the matter to arbitration were refused by the printers, the publishers said.

SHIELD BRAND SHOES

We extend a cordial invitation to all visiting merchants to make our commodious offices and warehouse their headquarters during their stay in Atlanta, and will be pleased to extend every possible courtesy and consideration to all visitors.

YOU WILL FIND ON OUR FLOORS, READY FOR IMMEDIATE SHIPMENT, A LARGE AND COMPLETE STOCK OF "SHIELD BRAND" SHOES, EMBRACING EVERYTHING THAT IS NEW, UP-TO-DATE AND GOOD IN SHOE-MAKING.

We are anxious to co-operate with our customers in every way possible to make the approaching fall season a prosperous and successful one for them.

We offer retail merchants of the Southeast every advantage of a nearby market, with prompt shipments and quick delivery, and low freight rates.

Any retail shoe merchant in the Southeast can have "SHIELD BRAND" shoes in his store for Saturday's selling within 48 hours after order is given us, which is a very distinct advantage in these days of keen competition, when quick turn-over is such an important factor in successful retailing.

With the exception of a few "dry spots" in the Piedmont Section, the outlook was never brighter for fall business, with abundant crops now reasonably assured, and fair prices for all farm products.

Labor throughout the Southeast is well employed, at fair wages!

Even now the pulse of trade is quickening, with the prospect of the early movement of splendid crops—tobacco, cotton, etc.

Besides our large, regular lines of strictly new, and up-to-the-minute styles of "SHIELD BRAND" shoes, we have on our floors at this time about one thousand cases of factory samples, discontinued lines, etc., which we are offering to visiting merchants at about half price, to close them out quickly. These are wonderful bargains for wide-awake merchants who want to put on a special sale for early fall business.

We are anxious for the opportunity to greet retail merchants at our place of business during the week of August 2 to August 7.

ATLANTA AUDITORIUM

A. M. Robinson Company Has Double Exposition This Week

The A. M. Robinson company, of 59 North Pryor street, are extending themselves in their preparations for the entertainment of the great numbers of out-of-town merchants and buyers who will come to Atlanta to see the Atlanta Industrial exposition that will be held all this week in the Atlanta Auditorium.

This big wholesale firm and manufacturing company, due to their close proximity to the auditorium, have taken advantage of the situation and will have a double exposition all this week, one at the auditorium and another at their salesrooms and factory at 59 North Pryor street.

In the auditorium they will have an elaborate and instructive exhibit of the work shirts and dress shirts, overalls and pants they make in their own factories here. As this firm has been operating their own factory for something like about a third of a century, their manufactured goods are shipped not only to all points in the south but to the east and west as well.

The shirt, overall and pants departments of A. M. Robinson are independent of all other sources of supplies. This big firm is turning out large quantities every day for immediate and future delivery to all parts of this country and every visitor to the industrial exposition should see the large exhibits at the booths and then see how they are made in their big factories.

The main store at 59 and 61 North Pryor street has been elaborately decorated for this big merchants' week in Atlanta and a visit to their store will be worth coming many miles to see. They have fitted up special departments where every phase of the modern way of displaying and selling merchandise is now done in the up-to-date successful stores.

In giving this demonstration they will use everything that is necessary to conduct an up-to-date retail store and they have installed special windows in their big store so that they can begin with the window displays and store decorations and then by calling on every department show how all lines of goods in a modern store can be shown to the best advantage.

During this demonstration no long speeches will be made but just short snappy talks and instructions that will be of much interest to every buyer and salesman or lady that will be in Atlanta this week and no matter how much ability a person may possess as a salesman they are sure to hear at this sales demonstration many new points on salesmanship that will be worth more to them than many days spent at home.

This merchandising exhibition of A. M. Robinson's will assist in putting many stores in position to do better business in the future. A store is located in this enlightened day when knowledge is power. All those taking advantage of this firm's invitation to come in and see their post graduate school in salesmanship, as it might be termed, will be in a position to return to their homes with a sales knowledge that will enable them to keep abreast and ahead of the times and greatly increase their monthly sales.

As this exhibition of A. M. Robinson's will be a style and fashion show as well it will be a gala affair. A very young ladies will act as models; show how the f-i and winter styles in all the most popular garments will look made from fabrics they sell, and this feature alone promises to outshine the last style show this firm put on, which up until that time was one of the best of its kind ever put on by a wholesale house in this country.

The officials of A. M. Robinson company, the heads of all departments and the house and road salesmen have for weeks past been inviting every merchant, buyer and salesman or lady in the dry goods, notions and ready to wear line to see these daily merchandise and style demonstrations while in Atlanta, and while they have done their best not to overlook any one, they are extending through these columns a cordial invitation to all visitors to Atlanta to make their big store their headquarters while in this city attending the Atlanta industrial exposition.

Four Young Bankers Now Junior Officers

Thomas K. Glenn, president of the Atlanta and Lowry National bank and the Trust Company of Georgia, announced Saturday the reelection of four junior officers in the two institutions, Wesley Shropshire, W. C. Adamson, Thomas E. Glenn and Edward C. Liddell. All four of these young men are Georgia boys and have been trained in the Atlanta offices of the bank.

Mr. Shropshire, who has been with the Trust Company of Georgia since 1922, was made assistant secretary and treasurer of that institution. He is originally from Rome, Ga., and has been secretary to Thomas K. Glenn since 1919. He is a member of the Atlanta Athletic club and the American Legion, Argonne Post No. 1.

Mr. Adamson, of the Pryor street office, has been with that bank since 1914 and has held practically every position in the bank outside of official posts. His present promotion makes him assistant cashier. His family have been prominently identified with the banking business of Georgia. J. R. Adamson, his father, founded the People's bank at Carrollton, Ga., and was for many years its president. R. F. Adamson, assistant secretary of the Atlanta Trust company, is his brother. Mr. Adamson is the nephew of former Congressman W. C. Adamson. W. C. Adamson, Sr., is now judge of the court of appeals of New York city.

Mr. Glenn and Mr. Liddell have been made assistant cashiers of the Peachtree office of the Atlanta and Lowry bank. Mr. Glenn has been with this bank since he was 17 years old, with the exception of the time he spent in the army. He served in the paymaster's department of the marine corps at Bordeaux, France, during the war. He is a brother of P. E. A. C. and J. A. Glenn, all of whom have been connected with Georgia banks. Mr. Liddell belongs to the well-known family of that name who have been residents of Atlanta for over 100 years. He is the son of the late Edward M. and Mrs. Liddell. He was one of the youngest officers to see service in the war, being commissioned at Camp Zachary Taylor, shortly after he became 21. He graduated from Marist college and Georgia Tech and is the treasurer of the National Alumni Association of Georgia Tech and is a member of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity and the Capital City club. Before his association with the Atlanta and Lowry bank, he was connected with the old American National and the Atlanta National banks.

OLD HAT COMPANY HAS REPUTATION FOR FAIR DEALINGS

For more than 60 years Atlanta has been looked on as a leading center in the wholesaling of men's and ladies' hats and many traveling men have covered the southeastern states during that long time representing the different firms located in this Gate City of the South.

A way back in the days when Atlanta was young three young men named Atkins, McKelvin and Brown began the handling of hats in the jobbing or wholesale way and for more than 30 years they were in business on Decatur near North Pryor street and their reputation for fair and square dealing was a by-word all over the south.

The hand of time, however, decrees that after a while young men will become old men, and two of them retired from the firm and some 20 years ago the firm's name changed to read Brown, Perryman & Greene Co., and the same good grade of merchandise and values passed on to the retail hat men of the south.

A few years ago Mr. Brown, of the original firm, retired and the name was changed to Perryman, Greene company, and while the trend of the times in modern merchandising has progressed very much the past few years this old firm keeps step with the march of progress and still maintains its high standing for fair dealing with the merchants of the southland.

Mr. R. A. Perryman, president, just recently returned from his fall buying trip and he has bought the most complete line of hats, caps, umbrellas and gloves his firm has ever carried. Large stocks of these goods have arrived during the past few days and more are now in transit.

POPE IS PLEASED WITH DRESS WORN BY AMERICANS

Rome, July 31.—Two American women are understood to have set the future fashions of women who are favored by a papal audience.

They are Mrs. Robert T. Rowan, of Pasadena, Calif., and Mrs. Robert McAdoo. Invited to a papal audience, they so impressed the pontiff with the simplicity and neatness of their dress, that it is understood women favored in the future, with an audience will be requested to adopt similar fashions. The Americans wore simple black satin dresses with veils covering their hair like a Spanish mantilla, long white gloves and high collars after the Queen Victorian fashion. Earrings were their only jewels.

"City Builder" Issue Is Devoted to Varied Atlanta Publications

The August issue of the City Builder is from the press with a unique cover presenting the title pages of more than 40 Atlanta publications. The current issue is devoted to Atlanta's publishers and printers, revealing a surprisingly wide variety of weekly and monthly magazines published in the city. There are 93 printing establishments in Atlanta and 40 odd magazines.

"Printing stands today among the great industries of the country, third in volume of business, being exceeded only by that of iron and food. With the exception of the cotton mills, the printing industry in Atlanta has the largest payroll of any other business. Right here is due the highest praise of Atlanta merchants and manufacturers because of their liberal patronage of local printing concerns," says Walter C. Foote in one of the leading articles of the magazine. Mr. Foote writes about the development of the printing industry in Atlanta, "Atlanta Leads in Class Journals" is the title of an informative article by Louie D. Newton, in which he points out the fact that 200,000,000 copies of Atlanta publications are read by the people of the United States every year. Mr. Newton calls attention to the fact that it cost $15,000,000 to produce these publications in 1925. It is further pointed out that Atlanta is the publishing center of the southeast and because of this significant fact the city and the state come in for an amount of worthwhile advertising that could not be by any other means be procured.

GIRLS DEFENDED AND ELDERS HIT BY PASTOR KIRK

Segalowitz Carrying Extra Large Stock at This Time

Visitors, buyers, merchants and salespeople who may be in Atlanta this week attending the big gala week and industrial exposition in the Atlanta Auditorium should not fail to see the great stock of ready-to-wear fall styles of ladies' coats and dresses of Jacob Segalowitz at 50 South Pryor street.

This place is also called the New York stock house on account of Mr. Segalowitz representing near a score of the leading dress and cloak houses in the big city, and due to his connection with these many manufacturers he is enabled to give the merchants of the southeast very close prices on up-to-the-minute styles and goods.

No visitor to Atlanta should fail to visit this Segalowitz store and sales room, for it affords the opportunity to see one of the greatest showings of ladies' coats ever seen in this part of the country, and as the great long rows of triple racks of colorful coats and dresses are just fresh from the makers shops, the visitor here will see the very latest and best in this fall and winter coats and dresses. Mr. Segalowitz, who is a young man with progressive ideas, stated Friday that when all the southern buyers wake up to the fact they can save much time and money in buying most any kind of goods in Atlanta they will make more money for themselves or who they represent than they do at the present time.

"Take our lines for an example," says Mr. Segalowitz, "nobody can buy in the manufacturing centers cheaper than we can sell, for we represent here in Atlanta the best makers of fine garments. Then the cost of transportation to the east and north should be taken into consideration, and to this must be added expensive hotel bills and other incidentals, and the cost of all this much higher freight rates than if the same goods were bought in Atlanta must be paid."

GREAT EVENT IN ATLANTA THIS WEEK

Tomorrow morning, Monday August 2, the Atlanta Auditorium will throw open the big doors for the greatest local industrial exhibits ever produced by local manufacturers.

This exposition will be in connection with the regular annual "MERCHANTS AND MANUFACTURERS' WEEK" which has been held in Atlanta for several years, and which has proved to be very helpful to the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association—as it is a proven demonstration that ATLANTA is the logical Jobbing center for all Southern Merchants to patronize.

Our Part in the Exhibition

We will show two wonderful booths at the show, which will only recapitulate what merchants everywhere have known for years past. They know that for thirty-five years we have manufactured the only genuine "LANKFORD HORSE COTTON COLLAR" in the world. They also know how easy it is to sell a "LANKFORD COLLAR." The farmer knows these collars have produced solid comfort and ease for millions of mules and horses.

We would like to see you next week and talk about the wonderful Cotton Collar.

THE CONSTITUTION'S REAL ESTATE REVIEW

CONDUCTED IN THE INTEREST OF DEVELOPMENT OF ATLANTA AND THE SOUTH

Prominent Atlanta Realtors Join Haynes Organization

J. Clayton Burke (left) and John Gilmore.

Announcement was made Saturday by Eugene V. Haynes that J. Clayton Burke and John Gilmore, prominent Atlanta realtors, would be associated with him in the sales development of Haynes Manor. It is planned to put this beautiful north side subdivision on the market within the next few weeks; it is already the scene of hundreds of autoists who find the drive through Haynes Manor's wooded hills a delightful week-end diversion, officials stated.

J. Clayton Burke, sales manager for the Haynes Manor organization, has lived in Atlanta for the past twelve years and has the reputation of being exceptionally well acquainted with north side property. Mr. Burke was formerly with the B. M. Grant company and its predecessor, the Grant-Jeter company. As general manager of this real estate concern, his duties brought him into close personal contact with properties in the same general section that Haynes Manor is located.

Prior to his association with Grant-Jeter, Mr. Burke was in charge of the sales activities in the southeast of the California Fruit Growers' exchange, with headquarters in Atlanta. He is a member of the Elks and of the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

John Gilmore, who will be in charge of the office of Haynes Manor, has been in the real estate business in this city for the past 23 years. For fifteen years alone he was with the late E. P. Ansley, and was instrumental in the laying out and developing of Ansley Park, another of Atlanta's north side residential sections. More recently Mr. Gilmore has been identified with the Burdett Realty company. Mr. Gilmore is a past president of the Exchange club and is now a member of the national governing body of that club. He is also secretary of the Atlanta Interstate council.

Construction work on the Haynes Manor general offices is now nearing completion. The structure is located on a plaza at the very entrance to the subdivision—on Peachtree battle avenue. It is of Spanish type architecture, flanked by huge towers or gateways, and provides an extremely attractive approach to the Manor.

"We have five houses already under way at Haynes Manor ourselves," stated Mr. Burke in discussing his plans, "and then Better Homes, Inc., have two under construction, and A. E. N. Everett has one dwelling nearing completion. You can look for definite and consistent development in Haynes Manor during the weeks just ahead."

New Apartment Of Knox Ready By September 1

Date of completion of the three-story brick apartment house of colonial architecture, being constructed at 1850 Peachtree road by Fitzhugh Knox & Sons, has been set at September 1, according to an announcement by Britton Knox, manager of the rental department. The structure will contain twelve units of five rooms and front porch each.

Each apartment will be a model home with regard to built-in features for the homemaker's convenience. In addition to latest devices, each apartment will be furnished with electric refrigerator and with access to an incinerator for disposal of waste. Artistic construction and complete equipment are the features of the new Peachtree edifice that the owners, Fitzhugh Knox & Sons, are able to boast.

Mr. Knox said "All twelve units in 1850 Peachtree were rented by July 15, although the building will not be ready for occupancy until September 1. I believe we could fill another just like it in a day, the demand is so heavy for apartments in that section."

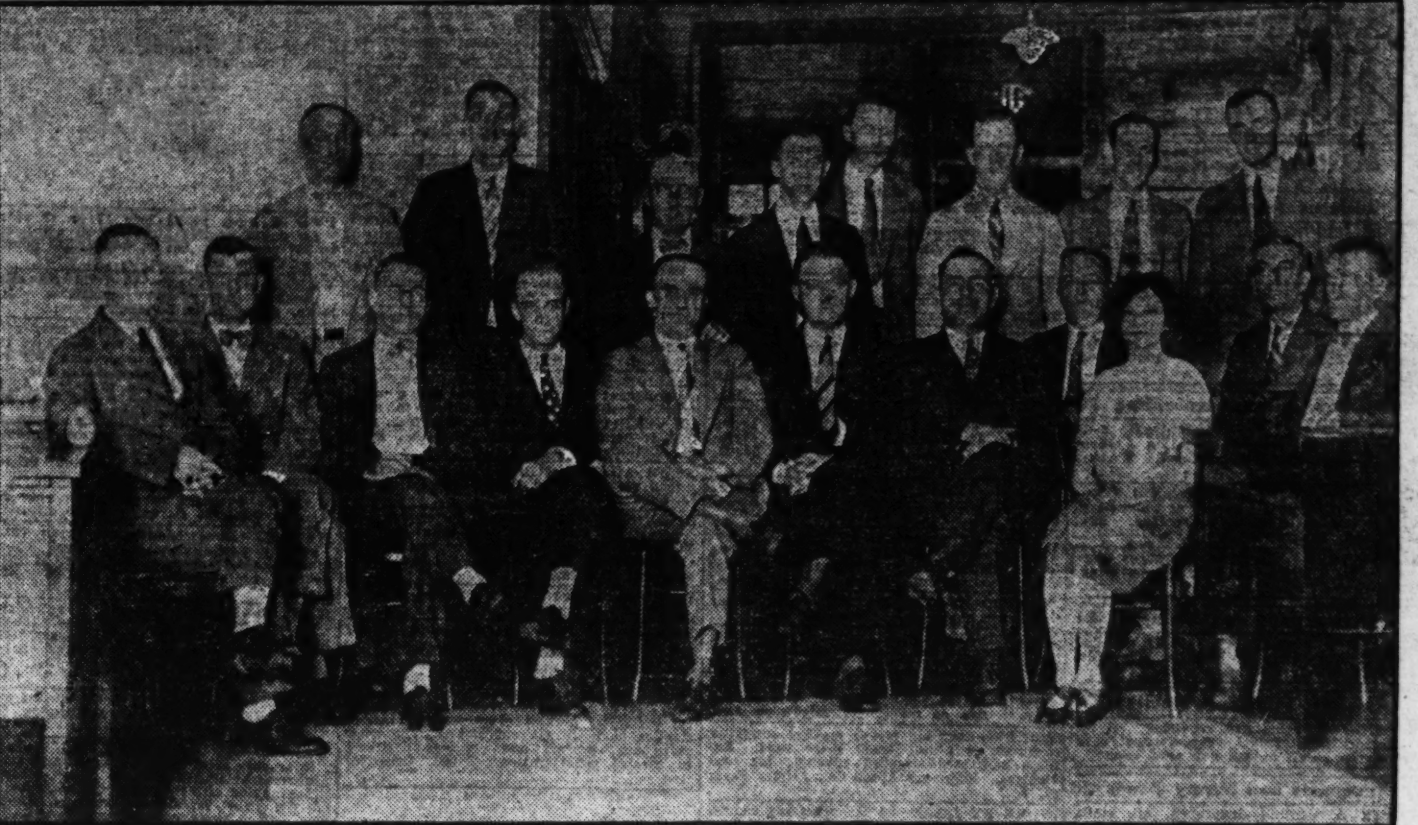

Of course, with outsiders settling in Atlanta every day, and numerous small concerns following in the footsteps of the large companies in establishing branches here, the rental condition is at its best throughout the city. While we only handle property we ourselves own, we feel certain that we will be 100 per cent rented by September 1. Mr. Knox said they expected to announce soon the construction of several more buildings, for which plans are not yet completed.

MRS. IVEY REOPENS REALTY OFFICE HERE

Mrs. Gussie B. Ivey, who recently returned from Florida, where she was engaged in the real estate business, has reopened her office in the Hayley building. She is specializing in high-type homes and now has several of this class under construction in the Argonne avenue section.

Mrs. Ivey was prominent in the real estate field of Atlanta before going to Florida. Her long experience in the realty business well qualifies her to render efficient service.

Thompson Adds to Realty Force Started With Only Two

Starting with the force of only two salesmen, John J. Thompson, widely known Atlanta realtor, has recently increased it to 20 by the latest addition of four more men. His office in the Chandler building has also been completely renovated. The four salesmen recently added to the Thompson staff are Mercer J. Harbin, Frank E. Floyd, W. I. Pirkle and G. A. Fuller.

Coming to Atlanta 16 years ago, Mr. Thompson connected with Swift & Co. and then as sales manager with Frank E. Block company before entering the real estate business. Although he previously dabbled in real estate, it was not until 1920 that he entered that field exclusively in a partnership with Ivey & Cooke, and since when Mr. Thompson has operated his own company, styled John J. Thompson company.

"By doing a strict brokerage business and specializing in homes and lots," Mr. Thompson said, "we find that not only can we give better service to our clients, but we are able to secure the cooperation of other real estate concerns specializing in different lines, as well as from companies whose businesses are allied to real estate. Fully one-third of our listings and prospects come from insurance and loan companies and other realty firms. Of course, this is also due to the fact that they are confident of the way in which we will handle their clients."

Another policy Mr. Thompson said he believed in fully and practiced is that of carrying through all dull spells with flags flying. "I never cut expenses when a calm hits the real estate business," he stated, "instead I center my attention on keeping up the volume of income and business at any cost with the result that, though we may make no profits during the short quiet period, when it is over we are just that much ahead and do not have to start rebuilding our old volume. In such periods every effort is made to keep the staff complete. If anything hurts a real estate concern, it is the high turnover of salesmen that is customary in that field. Breaking in new salesmen, besides its other disadvantages, is always an expensive proposition."

Moreover, constant shifting results in inefficient salesmen. I would rather divide all the commissions during a full period among my staff in an effort to keep it intact, than undergo the difficulties concomitant with a high labor turnover. As proof of his practicing this policy, Mr. Thompson named four men who have been with him nearly from the time he first went into the business for himself. These men are Otis Young, M. L. McWhorter, F. B. Wing and C. A. Blanchard.

From his first entering the realty field, Mr. Thompson has affiliated himself with the real estate board, and he has since been an important factor in making that body an active element in Atlanta real estate affairs. He is treasurer and director of the board, and on a number of its committees. A brief sketch of the recent additions to the John J. Thompson company's staff follows:

W. I. Pirkle, another recent addition, has been in the realty profession since leaving school. His father, who is mayor of Alma, Ga., also is in that business. Mr. Pirkle spent the last two years with the Estes Realty company in Florida, and many years before that with the D. and O. Lots Realty company, of Waycross, Ga. He is a native Georgian.

Frank E. Floyd entered the real estate field little more than a month ago when he connected with the John J. Thompson company. He calls himself a Coca-Cola product, having been with that concern for 15 years. He served with it first in Atlanta, and then in Brooklyn as manager of the bottling branch there. Since returning to Atlanta he has devoted his interests for a year and a half to the mercantile trade. He is specializing in the sale of property on the north side, particularly in Druid Hills and on Peachtree road.

W. B. Adams, another recent addition, has been in the realty profession since leaving school. His father, who is mayor of Alma, Ga., also is in that business. Mr. Adams spent the last two years with the Estes Realty company in Florida, and many years before that with the D. and O. Lots Realty company, of Waycross, Ga. He is a native Georgian.

SEARS, ROEBUCK BRING INCREASE IN REALTY SALES

Effects of the establishment in Atlanta of Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s enormous plant are being felt in many sections of the city's real estate field. C. F. Wilkinson, manager of Druid Hills, recently stated that he believes it is partly responsible for the increased sales of home lots and improved lots his company has been enjoying in the Druid Hills region.

Beautiful New Harris Residence

Residence of Joel Chandler Harris, Jr., recently completed on Habersham road.

Mr. and Mrs. Joel Chandler Harris, Jr., have recently had a charming home erected in the beautiful Habersham road section. It stands as a model of a well built home and an artistic landscape setting.

To see this home is to be captivated by its old English charm, its dignity, and its concordant adaption to the beautiful wooded landscape. This home is admirably suited to the spot in which it is located, and it would be hard to conceive of a more harmonious adaption.

The beautifully finished stucco with its splashes of red brick-work around the first-story windows, and the half-timbered patterns bringing out the windows of the second story, together with its broad gables and massive chimney, bring out the beauty of this design.

Typical of Old Masters. The architects of today recognized the value of metal windows in this type of design, because of their intrinsic beauty, strength and durability under severe atmospheric conditions. The architects of old selected materials with utmost care with regard to these qualities. The architects of today are typical of these old masters.

The use of metal casements on the inside of the house presents a very charming appearance as can be seen by the interior view looking from the living room into the sun parlor.

The homes of today are designed more and more with the idea of comfort, as well as beauty. Metal windows, or casements—as this type of window is known—produce a comfortable feeling in knowing that one has the most modern, as well as the most beautifully and efficiently designed windows. A direct personal comfort produced by the use of casements is that they will deflect any passing breeze into the house that is desired, and they will keep the sun out of the house without even a whisper.

Copper Casements. The casements used in this beautiful home were manufactured by the David Lupton's Sons company, of Philadelphia and Atlanta, and are made of copper steel.

This home was designed by architects, C. C. Wendelbeck, of New York, with Ivey & Cooke, of Atlanta, as associate architects, and was built by Contractors J. S. & C. R. Collins, who are the builders of some of Atlanta's most beautiful homes.

De Angelis Returns To Atlanta Opera After Wife's Burial

The old story of Harlequin clowning his way through the show while tragic grief clutched his heart because of the loss of a loved one came true in real life in Atlanta, it was revealed Saturday with Jefferson De Angelis, famous comedian with the Atlanta Municipal Opera company, in the stricken role.

After playing the buffoon in "The Pirates of Penzance" a fortnight ago while his wife of two years was suffering with a fatal illness at her home in Orange, N. J., Mr. De Angelis is now on his way back to Atlanta to play another light comedy part with heart-burdened with grief over the death of his wife who was buried Friday.

News of the death of Mrs. De Angelis came in a brief telegram received Saturday by Lewis Haase, general manager of the light opera company.

Monday buried today will arrive Monday, the telegram.

Monday the veteran comedian, who has brought laughter to millions of people and who has played almost every known kind of comedy role will begin work rehearsing for the comedy role of "Nish" in "The Merry Widow" and although his heart is stricken by the greatest possible loss he will follow the age-old tradition of the stage "the show must go on."

Mr. De Angelis and his wife were stage people whose home life was devoted and beautiful, according to friends who knew them intimately. They had been married for nearly four years and have grown children, one of whom is attending a university in the north.

In behalf of members of the light opera company and officials of the association, Mr. Haase sent a telegram of condolence to Mr. De Angelis, expressing the deep and sincere sympathy of all connected with the company.

Plot To Escape Police Station Nipped by Fain

A delivery at police headquarters was believed thwarted by Acting Assistant Chief Grover C. Fain early Saturday night when two hucksters were discovered on the person of Paul Turner, alias Jack Mayson, alleged escaped convict from Little Rock, Arkansas.

One of the saws was found in Mayson's belt, the other being carefully concealed in his shoe. He admitted he escaped from the Arkansas state prison, where he was serving a 10-year sentence for second degree murder, it is said.

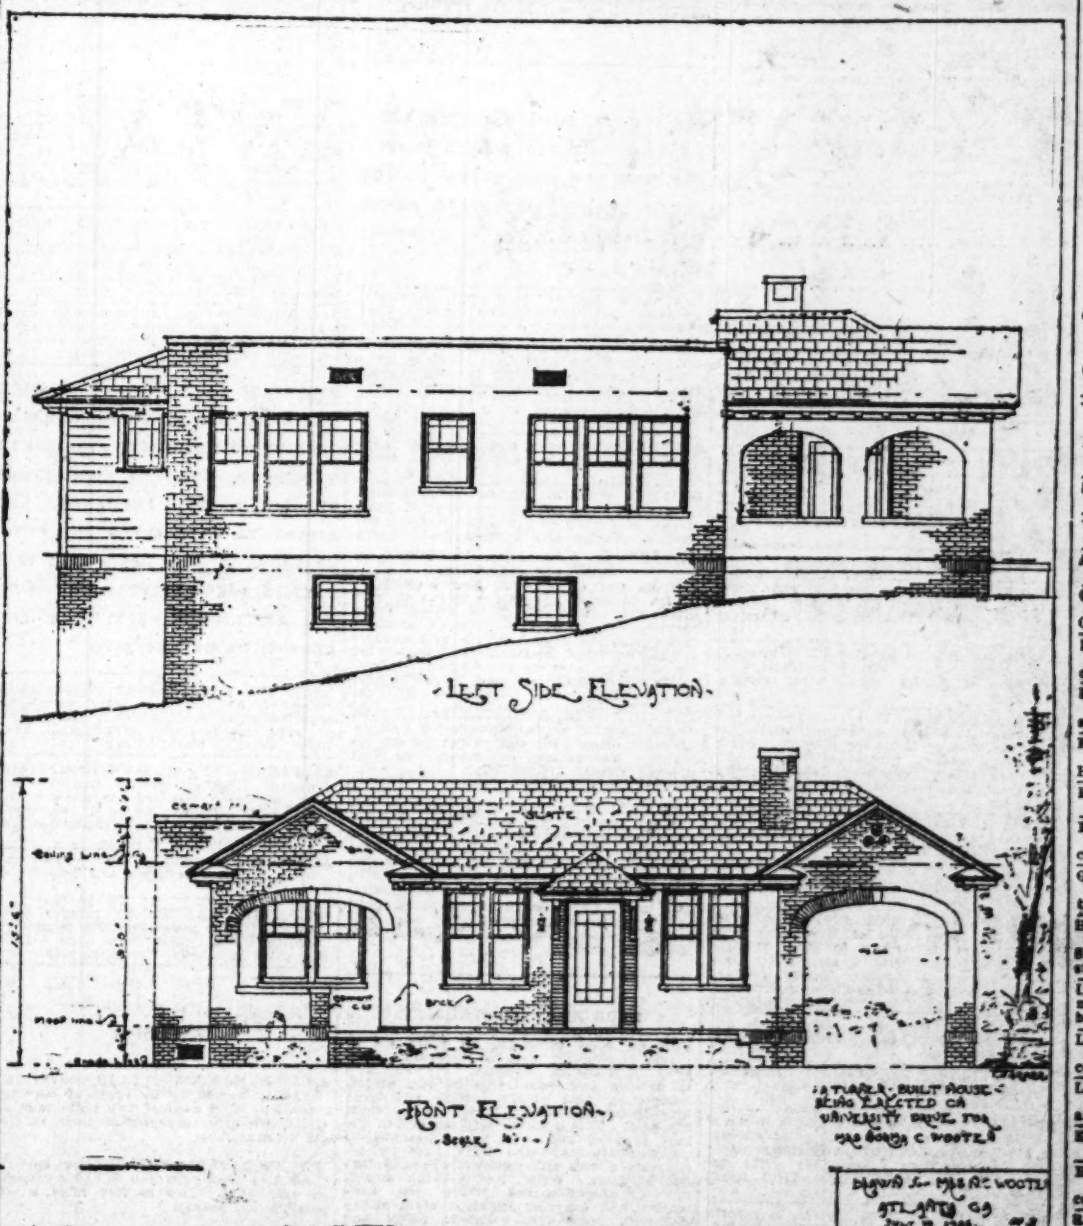

A small powder, which he said was poison, was found in his pocket and he said he intended to kill himself before returning to Arkansas. His attorney, H. W. McLeary, started habeas corpus proceedings in superior court Saturday, the case to be heard Tuesday morning at 9:30 o'clock.

Meanwhile an officer from Arkansas is here to effect extradition. Houston was arrested several days ago for a minor offense and was later identified by plainclothes men.

Families made it possible for Sears-Roebuck and company to secure retail merchandise at an unusually low figure and to pay this opportunity to its retail customers.

The store in Atlanta is the newest, best and most completely equipped in the entire Sears-Roebuck chain.

Drawings of Typical Turner-Built Home

Another Turner-built home under construction on University drive.

J. Lawrence Turner, deviser of the Turner ten-year plan, by which home purchasers are able to select the home they want, have it built and live in it while paying for it just as they would have to pay rent, has explained the basis of his plan as resting on the endurance value of the home constructed.

"In order to extend the payment for a home over a period of ten years," Mr. Turner said, "it is necessary to use the most lasting materials and skillful workmanship, so as to reduce deterioration, decay and repairs to a minimum. Such construction materials as hollow tile, brick walls, slate or tile roofing, tile bathrooms and high-grade bath fixtures, cement basements, selected hardwood flooring and structural growth pine, and other construction features as are used only in the most expensive homes, are the rule for all homes built under my ten-year plan."

By that method a home purchaser has the plans for his residence drawn by his own liking by the architects associated with Mr. Turner, or selects a home from the large files of plans already drawn. He is required to invest a minimum cash payment during the course of construction, and the balance is spread over ten years, making the payment not more than the purchaser would normally pay to pay at rent elsewhere. Therefore, the only investment the purchaser really makes in the home is the original cash payment.

"Much interest has been shown in the new home building plan," Mr. Turner said. "The public seem to realize the advantages offered by it." Mr. Turner is the developer and owner of the Turner property, that mile of land connecting Morrisville with Druid Hills. He stated that at present he has almost used up his supply of available lots there, and has been compelled to put in a steam shovel this week to open up new streets and lots, for which all conveniences, including gas mains, are being laid. This work is done in advance in order to keep a suitable supply of lots on hand for prospective purchasers.

"The public who are considering the purchase of lots are taking an enthusiastic interest in another feature of my proposition," Mr. Turner said. "They are permitted to select their lots and lay them on easy monthly payments with the understanding that when one-third the purchase price of the lot has been paid, we will build them a home according to their plans without additional cash payments."

Mr. Turner stated that he is now selling one house per week, and that this volume makes it feasible to purchase the highest grade of materials in wholesale quantities. That means, he explained, an expensive home can be constructed almost as cheaply as a lower grade home.

Father of Light Opera Sees First Show of Year

Victor H. Kriegshaber, prominent Atlanta business man, attended the Saturday afternoon performance of "Katinka," the most recent offering of the Atlanta Light Opera company and behind that simple statement which sounds like a society note hangs a story of marvelous exhibition of pure grit.

Mr. Kriegshaber is known as the "father of light opera" in Atlanta, as he was the first man to launch the movement which has given Atlanta such wonderful shows during the last two years.

Fate sometimes plays some cruel pranks and in the case of Mr. Kriegshaber fate assumed the role of a stroke of paralysis which came just prior to the opening of the light opera season and held him in an unwilling prisoner in his bed.

For five weeks he heard tales of the beauty of the season's opera, of the wonderful hits scored by the principals and of the general success of the season and he literally writhed in his bed.

Saturday he slipped off late in the face, tweaked the nose of that old peer, paralysis, and grabbing a pair of crutches hobbled out to his automobile and hied himself down to the Atlanta Light Opera house, where he

Retail Movement Instant Success Wherever Tried

The retail division of the great Sears-Roebuck institution, while comparatively young, is going to be one of the main activities in the entire organization. The retail movement started with the election to the vice presidency of R. E. Wood, on March 1, 1924. The first retail store in the Sears-Roebuck system was organized and built on the west side of Chicago, in the merchandise building of the Chicago store.

Although removed from the so-called beaten path the store met with such instant success that it became necessary to at once begin the construction of two new Chicago stores, one on the north side and one on the south.

EDUCATION SCHOOL BOARD Superintendent of Schools
Atlanta, Ga.

Haynes Street, City.

Why 451 boys, from thirty-one states, chose RIVERSIDE

TWO boys from Windsor, Ontario; two from Seattle, one from Greece, five from New York City, four from Mexico City, five from New Jersey, others from Cuba, Wisconsin, Missouri, Ohio, Montana.

Why do these boys pass up scores of good preparatory schools nearby and travel, in many instances, thousands of miles to attend RIVERSIDE?

The following are some of the reasons:

1. Location and Equipment.

RIVERSIDE is located two miles out in the country from Gainesville, Georgia, in the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains—fifty miles north of Atlanta—and has every facility for study, sport and recreation. There are modern new brick buildings, splendid athletic fields, all kinds of target ranges, the largest gymnasium in the South, almost perfect tennis courts, magnificent nine-hole golf course, large outdoor swimming lake, fishing grounds, etc. Buildings were fashioned primarily and exclusively for the express purposes of a boys' school. Rooms are well arranged and have every convenience.

2. Faculty and Methods.

RIVERSIDE has probably the strongest teaching force ever assembled in a Southern preparatory school. There are nearly thirty faculty officers, each a college or university graduate with successful experience in teaching boys. Colonel O. R. Horton, A. B., the Superintendent, was the President of Georgia Military College for seven years, then a major overseas, and has now been at Riverside six years. Colonel R. B. McGehee, A. M., the Executive Officer, was founder and for ten years the Superintendent of Gulf Coast Military Academy, then went overseas; is a Major in the Reserves and has filled the pulpit of many Southern churches. Major W. D. Mooney, A. M., the Principal, was the principal and owner of the Mooney School at Murfreesboro, Tennessee, and is an author of prominence. Captain A. T. Beaver, B. S., the Quartermaster, was a Captain in the World War, a civil engineer, and has taught boys exclusively for ten years. Captain Chas. G. Payne, U. S. R., the head of Riverside history department, was an American Military Attache at the Paris Peace Conference. Each and every man on the faculty has been chosen for the special place he fills. Faculty Officers live in same buildings and eat at same tables with cadets. Every boy recites every lesson every day and is helped at night in the preparation of lessons. Instructors are also proficient in various branches of sport and every cadet is required to participate in athletics or gymnastics under direction of faculty officers. Cadets are graded in this work the same as in Mathematics or English. Another important feature is the unique method adopted to teach thrift to the cadets. A parent pays one School Bill which embraces every possible expense, including spending money.

During each of the last six years, when school opened in September, there has not been a vacant bed at RIVERSIDE.

It is no longer necessary that Southern boys be sent North and East to obtain the highest type of Prep-School training.

3. Accomplishments.

With the foregoing facilities, it is not surprising that RIVERSIDE and its graduates should make the following enviable records:

A Academic.

Last year Riverside sent a larger percentage of its graduating class to the colleges and universities of this country than went from any similar school in America. Charles M. Slack, of Gainesville, Ga., was graduated from Riverside a few years ago. From Georgia he went to Columbia University in New York and was awarded last month (June, 1926) the degree of Ph.D., probably the youngest man upon whom Columbia has ever conferred this high honor.

William S. Marsden, of Yonkers, New York, was graduated from RIVERSIDE in 1921. He entered Yale that fall, and was one of the best athletes at Yale—representing his university in intercollegiate meets—and was graduated in June, 1925, summa cum laude. He stood fifteenth in a class of 250, and on the strength of his Yale record was given a responsible position in its research department by the Cadillac Motor Company.

B Military.

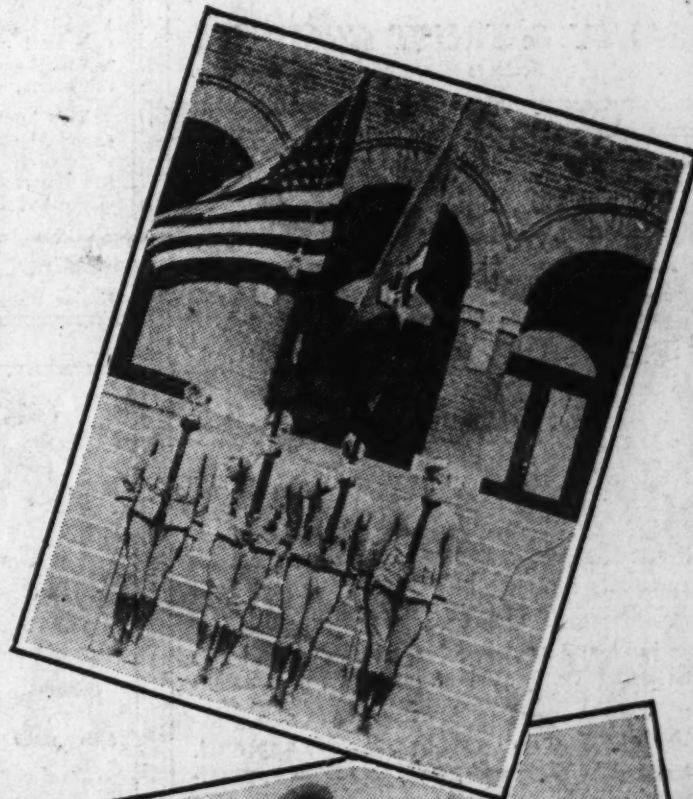

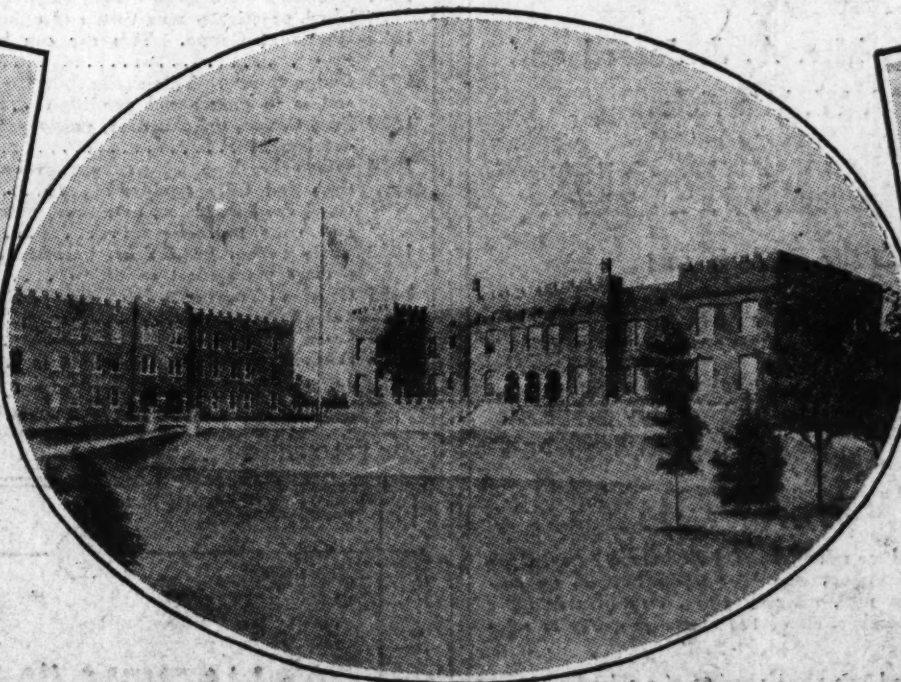

The United States War Department has officially declared that no school in America—between Virginia and New Mexico—has as fine a military standing as Riverside. In view of the fact that RIVERSIDE is one of the youngest American military schools, this is a wonderful record.

James M. Taylor, of Georgetown, Kentucky, while a Riverside cadet was last year awarded the Hearst Gold Medal for being the finest cadet rifle shot in America.

C Athletics.

The spirit of achievement and accomplishment that has put RIVERSIDE at the top, both from an academic and a military standpoint, is reflected in the school athletics. Riverside's football team won the undisputed championship of the G. I. A. A. last year—the highest athletic honor in Georgia. It is interesting to note that the eleven regular players on this football team came from as many different states.

J. Elliott Cooper, of Columbus, Ga., was graduated from RIVERSIDE a few years ago, entering Annapolis on RIVERSIDE'S certificate. He made an enviable academic and athletic record, was captain of the Navy baseball team this spring (1926) and was graduated creditably last month.

Marion Ivy Harris At Howard Theater In 'Fascinating Youth'

Constitution-Publix Screen Tests Another Big Feature of Week.

A genuine novelty is offered in the Howard theater's Publix stage presentation, "Alice in Movieland," to be given this week, in that the Paramount Junior Stars (with Atlanta's own Marion Ivy Harris) will appear in connection with the feature picture, their screen debut, "Fascinating Youth."

Many times in the past, screen stars have made personal appearances with their pictures, but never before has virtually the entire cast of a picture appeared in a lavishly presented act as a prologue to their own screen offering.

The Paramount Junior Stars are the students of the Paramount Picture school, chosen from over 40,000 applicants to receive a six months' training from the Famous Players-Lasky corporation in preparation for screen careers. At the close of the term, the students were in the leading role of Byron Morgan's story, "Fascinating Youth," directed by Sam Wood, and thereafter were given roles in other Paramount pictures.

An unusual feature of "Fascinating Youth" is that prominent stars appear in minor roles in support of the juniors, among them, Richard Dix, Clara Bow, Lois Wilson, Adolphe Menjou, Percy Marmont, Lila Lee, Thomas Meighan and Chester Conklin.

For the presentation to be given at the Howard this week the juniors were trained and directed by John Murray Anderson in an act based on their experience in the school. It includes singing, dancing, fencing and other specialties laid against a colorful movie studio atmosphere. It comes to a close in a unique ending that the management is keeping a secret as a surprise.

Another feature of the week's engagement will be that screen tests will be made on the stage each day from 11 to 12 o'clock noon of applicants for the second term of the school.

The overture for the week by the Howard Symphony orchestra under the direction of Joseph Littau, will be "Second Hungarian Rhapsody" by Liszt. Jane Jones Perkins will offer an organ specialty entitled "Bye, Bye Blackbird." A mammoth program will include an international news reel and comedy.

Alamo No. 2.
"My Wife and I," the new Warner picture that will be shown Monday and Tuesday for the first time, promises something unique in the way of screen entertainment. Judging from the plot, which was taken from the story by Harriet Beecher Stowe.

In brief, the story deals with the awful situation that arises when a father and son both become infatuated with the charms of a fascinating gold-digger. The beautiful maturity of Mrs. Borden fails to offset the somewhat dangerous lure of forbidden kisses, so Mr. Borden is rapidly entangled in the silken net of a girl's golden hair, while his son, whose spoiled youth knows no restraint of any kind, refuses to give up the pouting eyes and grasping hands that have been his so long.

The part of Mrs. Borden is an extremely difficult one that requires the contrasting colors of docile wisdom and outraged, beautiful womanhood. Irene Rich has been entrusted with this important role, which gives her winsome, appealing personality ample opportunity for expression. Huntley Gordon is the handsome figure to play the erring husband, John Roche and Constance Bennett will have dramatic roles.

James Madison Joins Fox Comedy Writers
James Madison, the well-known stage comedy writer, has forsaken his first love for the screen. He has been signed by Fox Films to inject comedy into feature pictures made by that company.

The first subject for his witty treatment is "What Price Glory." Mr. Madison is the editor of Madison's Budget, a humorous publication.

MOVIES

On the screens of Atlanta you will view some of the best photoplays of the present year. First scene, top left, the Junior Paramount stars (including Marion Ivy Harris, of Atlanta) in "Fascinating Youth." Next scene, with Mary Pickford in "Sparrows," said to be her best. Next, Rod LaRocque in an English comedy, "Bachelor Brides," at the Rialto. Then beautiful Corinne Griffith in "Classified," at the Palace Monday and Tuesday. Lower left, bedroom scene from "Dance Madness," with lovely Claire Windsor and Conrad Nagle, at the West End theater Wednesday. Then we see Jack Holt and Esther Ralston in "The Blind Goddess," at the Cameo. Next, Irene Rich in "My Wife," at the Alamo No. 2 Monday and Tuesday. Next, a scene of love from "Sandy," at Loew's Grand, with Harrison Ford. Lower right, scene from "The Flame of the Yukon."

METROPOLITAN SHOWS 'BACHELOR BRIDES' LATEST PICKFORD FILM ON RIALTO SCREEN

"Sparrows" Features Mary Pickford in Familiar Role.

Mary Pickford will lead a frolicsome crew of gamins to the Metropolitan theater tomorrow in "Sparrows," her newest and most dramatic film.

"Sparrows" tells a grippingly absorbing story of adventures on a queer farm in the southern swamp country. Some suggestion of the special effort expended in making the new Pickford film may be had from the fact that this swamp set alone required transportation of 600 trees and wholesale hanging of Spanish moss for background. It was especially built for the picture under the direction of Harry Oliver.

The story of "Sparrows" which is directed by the same William Beaumont who wielded the baton on the eminently successful "Little Annie Rooney," is highly dramatic, and the action fast from the very start. Sharply contrasting comic relief emphasizes the film's sheer suspense and tense moments. In the story a 12-year-old girl, "Mamma Mollie," battles for her picturesque retinue of orphans against the harshness of a baby farm keeper. Her role of "Mamma Mollie" affords Miss Pickford excellent scope to display in rollicking, hoydenish fashion. The part is just such a one as the public likes her to play.

Not only does Mary here find the perfect role for her talents, but the tenseness and thrills of this swamp-land drama and the support of an unusual cast, including Gustav von Seyffertitz, Roy Stewart, Mary Louise Miller, Spec O'Donnell, Monty O'Grady and other familiar faces, have earned for the picture itself the plaudits of Doug Fairbanks, who has publicly expressed his judgment.

"Even without Miss Pickford it

West End Theater.

A rip-roaring comedy farce that is nationally famous, a thrilling tale of the modern age and a melodramatic comedy headlines the bill at the West End theater for this week. It is, all told, one of the best-balanced programs which have come this way in some time.

On Monday and Tuesday, Paramount's "Behind the Front," with Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton in two screaming comedy roles, will be unraveled for the audiences. "Behind the Front" is a true mirror of the humorous side of the soldiering in France. The story concerns a couple of dumb doughboys, played by Beery and Hatton, and their love affair with an exceptionally beautiful and vivacious girl, Mary Brian, who never appeared more alluring and charming than she does in a Red Cross uniform in the picture.

Before joining up with Uncle Sam's raiding party, the two, Beery and Hatton, have been sworn enemies; the first a detective, and the latter a crook. But since they both took to wearing the same uniform, and have become buddies.

On Wednesday, "Dance Madness," featuring Claire Windsor and Conrad Nagle, will be screened. It is a story by Jay Kaufman, well-known New York columnist and fiction writer. Into it Kaufman has poured a vast quantity of the scintillating wit which has made him famous. No more fas-

Palace Theater.

Another week of really big pictures starts at the Palace theater in Inman Park Monday and Tuesday with the showing of beautiful Corinne Griffith in "Classified." This dramatic picture is one of the best that Miss Griffith has ever done and the stellar role gives her ample opportunity for the display of the full range of her talent.

Showing Wednesday only is another picture play that has made a tremendous hit everywhere. "Miss Brewster's Millions," starring the mischievous and lovable Bebe Daniels is a parody on the well known book called "Brewster's Millions" and though the story differs entirely from the book there are many humorous cinematic story has reached the screen for many a season.

"Red Dice," starring Rod LaRocque and Marguerite de LaMotte, will be shown Thursday and Friday. The scenes of "Red Dice" are laid in New York. The principals, like so many dice, are thrown together by the hand of fate, and the action of the story begins with a wallop. Heavily in debt to his motherly landlady, and unable to get anything to do, the hero, LaRocque, goes to a power in the underworld and offers to insure his life for $100,000, and then commit suicide, providing his kind old friend is taken care of. The events which follow this decision make the film one of the most uniquely enjoyable ones of the season.

Shirley Mason, formerly with Fox Films, is back again in "Upstream."

William Russell has a fighting role in "The Devil's Master," in which he has returned to the Fox lot after a long absence.

Madge Bellamy Stars in 'Sandy' At Loew's Grand

Modern Unconventionality Is Theme of Elenore Meherin Tale.

The famous William Fox production of "Sandy," based on Elenore Meherin's sensational novel, will be the feature picture offering at Loew's Grand theater this week. It is presented by a star cast of players, including Madge Bellamy, who plays "Sandy," Leslie Fenton, Harrison Ford, Gloria Hope, and others.

"Sandy" is the girl who snatched her fingers at conventions and embarked upon the perilous enterprise of living her life in her own way. The adventures of her career and the dangers confronting her have been woven into a story of absorbing interest.

Compelled by her family to marry Ben Murillo after she had innocently been compromised by circumstances she soon found she had not only a feeling of cold indifference to him, but one of bitter hatred.

Love really came to "Sandy" when she first met Ramon Worth. He seems possessed of every quality her husband lacked and for him she cast conventions to the four winds. Later she becomes disillusioned and leaves Ramon to go and live with her cousin Judith. Here she met and fell in love with Douglas Keith, an unsophisticated youth, who begged her to divorce her husband and marry him, but the net she had woven about herself barred her from happiness.

The story of "Sandy" is one of the most stirring written by a novelist of the modern school, and the picture production preserves all this interest. The story tells of just how far a flapper wife can defy conventions. It is a story of youthful folly. "Sandy" believed she could manage a husband without love, but her marriage of convenience taught its inevitable lesson of tragedy. No expense has been spared to give a perfect production of "Sandy." It was adapted for the screen by Eve Unell and was directed by Harry Beaumont.

A broken nose in a ring bout has proved a boon to Victor McLaglen in getting movie parts. His "tough" face makes him a real-looking Captain Flagg in "What Price Glory."

LOUISE HUNTER FEATURES 'SARI'

Abounding in bright and melodious music of the Viennese type, "Sari," the seventh of the brilliant offerings of the Municipal Light Opera association, will open at the Atlanta theater on Monday evening. "Sari" will be the first of the series of operas which will have the role in which dainty little Miti Hajas made Broadway laugh and cry. Starting as the provincial daughter of a celebrated old musician in the first act, she blossoms into the darling of a smart Parisian salon in the second. In the drawing room scene Miss Hunter will interpolate, by request, the beautiful "Polonaise" from "Mignon," by Ambrose Thomas. This artistic song will give Atlantans an opportunity to hear Miss Hunter's voice in coloratura singing, at which she excels. In addition to this number, four beautiful songs in the score fall to Miss Hunter. "Pick a Husband," "Hava-Na," "Simple Little Village Maid" and "Love's Old Sweet Song." In the latter she is joined by Leslie McLeod.

Lou Powers will develop the comedy for the production as the humorous tutor to the young count. Louis Templeman will have a fine part as the old musician William McLeod. Jack Usher and his wife company will be the young count and Mary Leila Patterson will have a light comedy role. The first scene is laid in the mountains of Hungary and the second in Paris. Both scenes offer opportunity for striking staging and the costumes are gorgeously appropriate. Performances will be given every night this week, with matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.

Barbara Luddy, the little Fox consequence, was married for the first time in photographs in the Fox comedy, "Hospital Honeymoon." She has been in pictures three years.

ALLEN ZEE COMPANY ON LOEW'S STAGE

Coulter and Rose, Blackface Artists, Also on Big Bill.

Presenting a program in which beautiful music is combined with all the latest dances the famous Allen Zee company will appear as the head-line attraction on the new bill of vaudeville which opens at Loew's Grand Monday.

This company will present "Entertainment From A to Z," and will include almost every type of singing and dancing in its repertoire. There are 10 people in the cast and they also form a jazz band of unusual ability. Besides Allen Zee are nine musicians and dancers including Effie Martyn.

Reports from other theaters where this act has appeared are uniform in praising it for its novelty as well as for the numerous types of entertainment offered.

Two of vaudeville's favorite blackface comedians, Coulter and Rose, will bring their famous "Darktown Frolics" on the new bill. These who recall this pair of funmakers will remember the gales of laughter they produced here on previous visits.

Jack Usher and his wife company of players will appear in a new musical comedy satire entitled "Married Life." This is a comedy singing and talking number full of bright and clever lines.

In "Humorous Interviews," Charles and Grace Morat will present a new comedy and singing number.

The feature picture attraction for this week is "Sandy," with Madge Bellamy, Harrison Ford and an excellent cast.

Cameo Theater.

Coming to the Cameo on Monday and Tuesday is a brilliant drama of justice, "The Blind Goddess," starring Jack Holt and Esther Ralston, and with Ernest Torrence and Richard Tucker in the cast—the story of a man who placed duty before love in the greatest fight of his career to save the name of a life of a woman he knew was innocent and over the wishes of the other woman in his life.

On Wednesday and Thursday the Cameo brings back one of the sweetest love stories ever shown on the screen, "Memory Lane," with Conrad Nagel, Eleanor Boardman and William Haines in the cast. "Memory Lane" is the story of a girl in love with one

T. R., JR., TRAINING AT PLATTSBURG

Teddy, Jr., is back in fighting togs, and proud of it. As colonel of the 26th infantry, the outfit with which he served in the great war, Roosevelt enters on a half-month of training at Plattsburg, N. Y. Friends say Teddy, Jr., is happiest in military garb.

Antiques and rare old furniture used in pictures made by the Tailmade sisters are handled with as much care as are accorded them in the fashionable dealer's mart. Much of the furniture used in their productions is purchased from the same firms which supply various American museums with their exhibitions of modern and period furniture.

Interior decorating has taken its place as an important factor in motion pictures. The art director now makes his seasonal tours in search of material for this feature of scene setting.

Seldom is a large motion picture made until the studio location man has found the site best suited for the scenes required away from the studio. But Frederick A. Kummer, Universal author, has started deliberately to find a location in which he not only can set the home and environment of his characters, but in which the company likewise can film the scenes for the picture.

The immediate requirements in Kummer's story are a historic, picturesque southern homestead; waterfalls within walking distance; a mill of authentic antecedents and a historic picture gallery of artistic southern ancestors.

Two new members of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer motion picture company were high officers in the Russian army in czarist days. Gouraie Bey Schoff now has charge of a troupe of Cosacs brought here for the production, "The Cosacs," while former Major General Theodore Lodi of the Imperial Russian Guard, is technical adviser for the same picture.

A new problem in underwater photography was solved successfully by Director John Ford and his cameraman in filming "The Devil's Master." It was necessary to have a continuous sequence beginning above water and continuing under the surface while the picture showed characters from the deck of a submarine.

This was accomplished by means of a square buoy, fastened to the deck of the ship. When the camera motor was started it continued grinding until the craft was far beneath the surface.

Stere MacDonald has saved one company $80,000 a year in an apparently negligible item. His perfection of the art of manufacturing flowers has made it possible for Metro to supplant the real ones.

He learned his art in Vienna during the war, when he was assigned to watch an artificial flower factory for spies.

New Westminster, B. C.—Establishment of a sugar beet industry in British Columbia will be undertaken if the provincial government will subsidize the production of sugar at the rate of $50,000 a year, states W. H. Watson, head of a Vancouver syndicate. The proposal calls for a factory at New Westminster to cost about $1,250,000 and capable of handling 3,000 tons of beets a day. The subsidy asked of the government would amount to one-half a cent a pound on all sugar produced up to 10,000,000 pounds.

Margaret Livingston has another volatile vampire role in the Fox picture, "Womanpower," in which Keith Perry and Ralph Graves are featured.

Nine Women And Nine Men Bathe in Nude

Bathers Not Embarrassed When Spotlight Turned on Them.

Nyak, N. Y., July 31.—Nine young women, and an equal number of men took part in a midnight nude bathing party in Hook Mountain park last night.

A resident of Nyack, who motored out to the park at 2 o'clock in the morning, remained three hours and then returned to report to police how he had seen the bathers disporting themselves without bathing suits. He said the bathers were not embarrassed when he turned the lights of his automobile on them, only complained that the light attracted mosquitoes.

Police who patrol the park are off duty at midnight.

It is announced that the patrol will be maintained through the early morning hours.

The immediate requirements in Kummer's story are a historic, picturesque southern homestead; waterfalls within walking distance; a mill of authentic antecedents and a historic picture gallery of artistic southern ancestors.

Two new members of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer motion picture company were high officers in the Russian army in czarist days. Gouraie Bey Schoff now has charge of a troupe of Cosacs brought here for the production, "The Cosacs," while former Major General Theodore Lodi of the Imperial Russian Guard, is technical adviser for the same picture.

A new problem in underwater photography was solved successfully by Director John Ford and his cameraman in filming "The Devil's Master." It was necessary to have a continuous sequence beginning above water and continuing under the surface while the picture showed characters from the deck of a submarine.

This was accomplished by means of a square buoy, fastened to the deck of the ship. When the camera motor was started it continued grinding until the craft was far beneath the surface.

Stere MacDonald has saved one company $80,000 a year in an apparently negligible item. His perfection of the art of manufacturing flowers has made it possible for Metro to supplant the real ones.

He learned his art in Vienna during the war, when he was assigned to watch an artificial flower factory for spies.

New Westminster, B. C.—Establishment of a sugar beet industry in British Columbia will be undertaken if the provincial government will subsidize the production of sugar at the rate of $50,000 a year, states W. H. Watson, head of a Vancouver syndicate. The proposal calls for a factory at New Westminster to cost about $1,250,000 and capable of handling 3,000 tons of beets a day. The subsidy asked of the government would amount to one-half a cent a pound on all sugar produced up to 10,000,000 pounds.

Margaret Livingston has another volatile vampire role in the Fox picture, "Womanpower," in which Keith Perry and Ralph Graves are featured.

WHEEL ON GEORGIA RAISED BY HAWKING

Hawkins, chairman of the Citizens and Southern, has written a letter to the editor of the Manufacturers' Record, in which he says that he is glad to see him for a recent article on conditions in Georgia and that the letter follows:

Manufacturers' Record,
Baltimore, Md.
Sir:
We read with much interest the article appearing on the front page of your July issue commenting on the existing conditions in Georgia and Florida.
We have clearly and concisely set out the conditions as they exist, and thank you for your interest.

Thank you, and at the same time congratulate you on the splendid work you have rendered this section of the small chain of stores. It has not failed, and which is inevitable, conditions in Georgia are good; we are blessed with tobacco, fruits, melons, corn and cotton. The failure of these 'chain' stores has been very much exaggerated. The business as a whole is most satisfactory.

ann with our 'bumpers' the many new industries the south, we are moving for the prosperity and development of this section."

To RICH'S August Brings Many Unusual Offerings

Just a Minute! Every Woman Knows

That she can't be happy shopping unless the baby's happy, too.

Of course the baby himself is sometimes happy when he's shopping—from floor to floor. We've seen him under these circumstances. He enjoys that quick, sudden escape from Mother while she's weighing the solemn merits of a dance frock for sister.

But Mother, who would like to get something done? Well, she'd rather this little "padlock on the chain of love" were happy somewhere else.

In Rich's nursery—fourth floor, to the right of the music department—over 1,000 little ones, carefully guarded by a trained nurse and a trained attendant, play every month while their mothers shop with peace and profit.

Perhaps we might as well admit one little difficulty. Sometimes the youngsters have too good a time. There's one little lady, for instance, who comes quite often and never fails to wait lustily when her mother takes her home.

Miss Wilma Ford Weds Mr. Winterle At Home Ceremony

Beautiful in its simplicity was the wedding of Miss Margaret Wilma Ford and Charles Elmer Winterle, which was solemnized Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock, July 31, at the home of the bride in West End. The lower floor of the home was thrown together for the wedding, the interior of which was beautifully decorated in gladioli, palms, etc. An improvised altar was made of palms, ferns and cut flowers and tall cathedral candelabra at either side held white burning candles. Immediately before the ceremony "Oh, Promise Me" was sung by Miss Mittie Ford, sister of the bride, accompanied by Miss Grace Zachary, who also played Mendelssohn's wedding march.

The bride came in on the arm of her brother, Jesse H. Ford, who gave her in marriage. The bride, a charming young woman of the blonde type, was never prettier than in her exquisite gown of powder blue crepe with picture hat to match. Her bouquet was of bride roses and valley lilies. The only attendants were the bride's sister, Miss Annie Maie Ford, as maid of honor, and the groom's brother, Stewart Winterle. Reverend Father Walsh, of Immaculate church, officiated, using the impressive ring service. Immediately after the ceremony, the bride, attired in a beautiful green mington crepe model with accessories to match, and groom left for a bridal trip, destination unknown.

Elaborate Ball at Woman's Club To Honor Atlanta Movie Star

Miss Marion Ivy Harris, the Atlanta girl, who was accepted for Paramount Motion Picture school by the Famous Players-Lasky, the largest organization of its kind in the world, will be the fete visitor to the city the forthcoming week. The most outstanding entertainment given in her honor will be the Marion Ivy Harris ball, which will be tendered her by the Atlanta Woman's club, at the Biltmore hotel Tuesday evening, August 3, beginning at 9:30 o'clock.

Assisting Mrs. Smith, president of the Atlanta Woman's club and the official hostess of the occasion, will be assisted in receiving by officers of the club, Mrs. John R. Hornady, Mrs. DeLois Hill, Mrs. E. V. Carter, Mrs. J. A. Carlisle, Mrs. D. F. Stevenson, Mrs. W. D. Williamson, Mrs. Eva Corrigan, Mrs. Joel Hunter, past presidents as follows: Mrs. A. McD. Wilson, Mrs. Bolling Jones, Mrs. Hamilton Douglas, Mrs. Woods White, Mrs. A. P. Coles, Mrs. P. J. McGovern, Mrs. J. N. McEachern, Mrs. Irving Thomas, Mrs. E. M. Boykin, Mrs. Alonso Richardson and Mrs. Norman Sharp.

The motion picture division of the club will assist in entertaining the guests, and forming this group, under which department the club is sponsoring the entertainment, are Mrs. Frank Nadeau, Mrs. Alonso Richardson, Mrs. J. H. Lorenz, Mrs. T. C. Fabel, Mrs. J. H. Albright, Mrs. Robert Hodgkin, Mrs. Newton C. Wing.

All department heads and chairmen of committees of the club will have a part in the entertainment and every member of the executive board of the organization is invited to attend and assist in the entertaining. The Atlanta better films committee, with Mrs. Frank Nadeau as chairman, will assist in entertaining.

Miss Harris and eleven associate artists, who have graduated from the Paramount school, will attend the ball and be accompanied by sixteen professional players, all of whom are making a tour of the cities over the country. They have visited Boston, Detroit, Buffalo, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Dallas, Texas, Memphis and other cities before coming to Atlanta, the home of the leading artist of the group.

Junior Stars.
The Paramount junior stars, who appear on the screen in "Fascinating Youth," will during their visit to this city appear in person in John Murray Anderson's Public stage production, "Alice in Wonderland," in connection with the presentation of "Fascinating Youth" on the screen at the Howard theater all the week.

Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith, president of the Woman's club, in commenting on the entertainment for these splendid young stars said: "Knowing of the great amount of competition there exists in the motion picture world, it is with great pleasure that I find that our beautiful Atlanta girl, Miss Harris, who will be our honor guest for the coming week, is of the lovely unselfish type, whose principal attributes are generosity and endurance. I am told that upon this tour, Miss Harris has persistently given thought to the others and declined any attention unless the entire group of graduates were included in the attention. The test of a girl's character and endurance must certainly come," continued Mrs. Smith, "when she has been accepted into the movies and we are proud that Atlanta's daughter has proved that she possesses the fine qualities that are required to attain success in anything."

Lineal Descendant.
Miss Harris is a lineal descendant of Sir Francis Drake and of Betty Zane, an active participant in the revolutionary war and whose heroism won her a coveted place in American history. The family of Miss Harris on the maternal side came to the colonies with William Penn and settled on the Potomac river. Educators and journalists figure prominently among her ancestors and among her living relatives who have achieved enviable successes is Zane Gray, the well-known novelist, and Miss Percy Haswell, who was in the dramatic foreground as the leading lady for William H. Crane and was later lifted to stardom by the late Daniel Frohman.

Mrs. George Currie, official champion of the Paramount junior stars, arrived in the city Friday and will be followed by the arrival of the group of artists Sunday evening. Mrs. Currie speaks in a very encouraging manner of Miss Ivy Harris and characterizes her as "a grand little trouper."

Mrs. Currie is the wife of the Paramount school instructor and enjoys the young people and sees a great future for them in their new field of art.

Among the touring artists are "The Aristocrats," a quartet of boys, who have met with much success in their feature work. Miss Mary Dell, a singer, and Miss Jane Overton, a very clever toe dancer. These artists will have a part in the entertainment of the evening at the Biltmore.

Tickets on Sale.
Tickets are on sale for the Marion Ivy Harris ball at the Cable Piano company, Atlanta Woman's club and Biltmore hotel. Admission, $3 for couple and single tickets $2. "The Little Courtin' Car"

BY GERALD BEAUMONT

(McClure's Magazine, published posthumously today a poem, the author of which, Gerald Beaumont, died three days after he sold it to the magazine. Beaumont lived in Hollywood, Calif. The poem follows.)

Within a shingled shelter where its humble life began
A little car reposes by a stately new sedan;
Its tires are all in tatters and its hooded heart is still,
And never more shall little car toil bravely up a hill.
Or bear me down to Devon town along the gypsy trail
That links primeval forest to a poppy-painted vale.
So ancient is the little car that all the neighbors grin,
And wonder why she should be here and I have never turned it in.

It seems but only yesterday that I played Lochivar
And went a-wooing Mary in that little courtin' car;
My Mary was the village belle, and I an awkward lad—
The roadster blue, designed for two, was all the wealth I had,
But Mary she was firm in faith, and I was strong in hope,
So in the little courtin' car we planned that we'd elope,
And if in deep approval of the tender vows it heard!

What joy divine could equal mine when Mary was my bride
And in the little courtin' car we started by the roadside;
To Eden bent in sweet content beneath a sky so blue
I doubt if lovers save ourselves its equal ever knew.
And surely Nature saw in us some mystic King and Queen
For never was there Spring so fair, nor Summer so serene!

Small wonder that two hearts kept pace with merry motor's tune
As in the little courtin' car we spent our honeymoon.
The roads of life are rough with strife, and life's great tracks are strewn
But they who hold to Hope and Faith, with Love as their chauffeur Need have no fears that passing years will find the journey vain
For gifts like these are magic keys that open wide the lane,
And happiness lies close at hand, so very close I fear
We sometimes look so far ahead, we're blind to what is near,
And in the little courtin' car we busily we strive
We do not keep the precious flame of sentiment alive!

The years have flown on fairy wings since Mary was my bride
And in the little courtin' car so happily we'd ride;
My Mary is a mother now, and I a father proud Whom fortune with a kindly hand has lavishly endowed;
But ever we shall lovingly retain the roadster blue
That took us down to Devon town and was designed for two;
We'll not forget the humble days when I played Lochivar,
And went a-wooing Mary in that little courtin' car!

Mrs. Richardson Makes Address On Motion Pictures

Mrs. Adona Richardson, past president of the Atlanta Better Films committee, made an interesting talk at the Friday afternoon tea at the Atlanta Woman's club, when she told the club visitors much of the interesting side of motion picture development and especially of the splendid work done by the Paramount Picture school, in New York. She commended Miss Marion Ivy Harris, who will be the guest of the Atlanta Woman's club next week, at a delightful entertainment at the Billmore hotel, in her splendid work at the Paramount school and urged those present to give her a cordial reception to her home in Atlanta.

Mrs. Harrison speaks. Following Mrs. Richardson's talk, Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith, president of the Woman's club and official hostess at the tea, introduced Mrs. John H. Hornaday, first vice-president of the club, who is conducting publicity for the Marion Ivy Harris Ball, and Mrs. Hornaday responded with facts about the Harris family and her ancestral connections. "It will be interesting to know," said Mrs. Hornaday, "that Miss Harris comes from a very distinguished family, being the great-granddaughter of Betty Zane, an active participant of the Revolutionary war and whose heroism won for her a coveted place in American history. Miss Harris' grandfather was one of the founders of the University of Vermont and among her living relatives who have achieved enviable success are Zane Grey, the well-known novelist.

"In the course of adjusting living conditions Colonel Ebenezer Zane, a pioneer and warrior," continued Mrs. Hornaday, "who was one of Miss Harris' ancestors, founded the city of Zanesville, Ohio, and later founded what is now Wheeling, W. Va. In Wheeling there now stands a monument which is a tribute to Betty Zane in appreciation of her services in saving Fort Henry, Kentucky.

Mrs. George Currie, of New York, official chaperone of the group of players, to be entertained here next Thursday evening by the Woman's club, spoke briefly of the success Miss Harris had met in the various cities where her first picture was shown, and of how she anticipated coming back to her Atlanta home and enjoying the contact with her friends here. Mrs. Currie was the guest of Mrs. Price-Smith, at the tea.

Stated Regent, Mrs. W. S. Coleman, another feature of the afternoon tea, which proved interesting, was

United States Flag Association

At the 35th Continental congress, National Society Daughters of the American Revolution, April 19-24, 1926, a strong resolution was unanimously adopted endorsing the aims and purposes of the United States Flag association, of which the Honorable Calvin Coolidge, president of the United States, is honorary president. In this resolution, the N. S. D. A. R. is urged to cooperate in the work of the flag association, and a strong appeal is also made by the national chairman of the committee on correct use of the flag, to the D. A. R. for cooperation. Her report, as given at congress, appears on this page elsewhere, and all D. A. R.'s are asked to read it.

D. A. R. chapters everywhere are asked to form living flags, and it is interesting to note that the state regent, Mrs. Herbert M. Franklin, is the first person in Georgia to join a "living flag," she having purchased a living flag, and represents a stripe in the flag. Founded by Mrs. John Miller Horton, national flag chairman, the flagstaff being represented by Colonel James A. Moss, director general of the United States Flag association.

When the president called out the various states of the union and asked that the visitors and local sent from each state stand as the name was called. This was done following the remarks of Mrs. T. T. Stevens, who commented on Mrs. Price-Smith's success in mobilizing her forces so splendidly from her native state, Kentucky. It was shown that guests were present from every state from New York to California and back to Florida. Large numbers stood when Alabama was called, as well as Kentucky, Florida, Tennessee and other states.

Mrs. Mary Griffith Dobbs conducted a musical program of several vocal numbers and piano selections by local artists.

The living flag is the foundation upon which is built the program of work of the United States Flag association, a living flag consisting of 63 citizens of the republic, one representing each of the states, the District of Columbia, the flagstaff, one the blue field, 13 the stripes and 48 the stars, humanly typifying the flag of the United States. Each living flag is a definite patriotic unit, dedicated to practical patriotic service in fostering reverence for the flag of the United States and combating all influences and forces hostile to the ideals and institutions for which that flag stands.

Chapters of the D. A. R. can, in accordance with the resolution passed by the last Continental congress, cooperate in achieving the lofty, far-reaching aims and purposes of the United States Flag association by making the formation of living flags from among their members and others a part of their program of work for the coming year.

Having set the example the state regent urges that all Georgia daughters enter into this work of the United States Flag association by including the formation of living flags, when work in earnest begins in the fall, spending several weeks with her grandmothers, Mrs. O. C. Simmons.

Camp Highland Staff Presented Portrait of Miss Lucy Adams

An unusual ceremony was held at Camp Highland last Sunday, with only the members of the camp staff present. Miss Elizabeth Gregg, member of the Y. W. C. A. board, and a staunch friend of Camp Highland, presented to the camp staff a portrait of Miss Lucy Adams, physical director of the Y. W. C. A. and of Camp Highland, who leaves today in preparation for her new work with the national Y. W. C. A.

The portrait, a study in crayon, by Lewis Gregg, prominent artist and brother of Miss Elizabeth Gregg, was hung over the fireplace in the white house. Miss Gregg made an appropriate presentation speech, saying that it was fitting to have the picture over the hearth, for just as the hearth is the heart of the house, so is Miss Adams the heart of Highland. Miss Lucy Adams, head counselor, accepted the picture for the camp staff, and the entire group sang the camp Alma Mater, with an additional verse, written specially for this occasion, by Miss Olive Hall.

Miss Adams' Success. Miss Adams, who has been at Camp Highland a great success, is leaving today, after spending seven years of hard work in behalf of the camp and the local Y. W. C. A. She came to the camp as director, at a time when it stood wavering in the balance.

A young camp, only two years old, and scarcely big enough for recognition. The full extent and magnitude of Miss Adams' work at Highland will probably never be known. For, although the yearly improvements at the camp bear mute witness to her ceaseless thought and planning, there are thousands of things intangible that she has done which are to be rated higher even than those very fine and thoroughly necessary material things. Camp Highland's richest heritage is that of unselfish, friendly hospitality which Miss Adams has established by force of her gracious example.

Leaves August 25. After spending two weeks in and around Atlanta, visiting her family and friends, Miss Adams will leave for New York with Mrs. Clarence Bradley. September 1 Miss Adams will take up her new work with the national Y. W. C. A. Miss Adams is leaving Camp Highland in capable hands for the remainder of the summer. Miss Mary Moss, of Chattanooga, Tenn., the new industrial secretary of the Atlanta Y. W. C. A., takes over the duties of Highland. The rest of August Miss Moss has had wide experience in camping and in Y. W. C. A. work. She is no newcomer to Highland, having been there for the past two weeks as a silent observer of camp activities.

UPSHAW ELECTED HONORARY MEMBER BY SPANISH VETS

Congressman W. D. Upshaw will be honored in the Fitzhugh Lee camp of Atlanta, as an honorary member for life, when that organization holds its regular meeting today at its headquarters in the city auditorium, according to announcement by officials Saturday.

The distinction comes as the result of services rendered by Mr. Upshaw, who, as ranking democratic member of the pension committee of congress, aided in the passage of the Knutson pension bill for relief and compensation of disabled Spanish war veterans and their widows and orphans. The United Spanish War Veterans, a national organization, has elected an honorary member by a unanimous vote of the camp several months ago, approval of that resolution having been obtained from the War Department commander of Georgia, and Carmi A. Thompson, commander-in-chief at the national headquarters in the United States.

Preceding the ceremonies for the congressman, which takes place at 4 o'clock, a business meeting of the Fitzhugh Camp No. 8 will be held beginning at 3 o'clock. All veterans and their families are requested to be present at the meeting.

Miss Maxine Adams, lovely daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hunter Adams, whose engagement is announced today by her parents, to John Bennett Ross, son of Mrs. J. P. Billups, the marriage to take place in September.

The announcement in today's paper by Mr. and Mrs. William Hunter Adams of the engagement of their daughter, Maxine, to John Bennett Ross, will be of interest to a host of friends of the young people.

Miss Adams is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hunter Adams and for a number of years has been a leading figure in the social activities of the college set. She is a young lady of unusual beauty and intellect and by her personal charm and lovable traits has won for herself a countless number of friends. Bride's Family. The bride-elect is connected with some of the oldest and most prominent families in Georgia. Her mother is a descendant of the Fluker family, whose history can be traced far back into the history of England, and included many famous men. The first settler in America was Thomas Fluker, who came as British secretary of the Picasassa colony of Maine and Massachusetts in 1742. He discharged his duties as provincial secretary with great credit and was held in the highest respect by king and colonist. When the colonies declared war upon England he remained loyal to the king and fled to Canada, but all three of his sons fought for the united colonies and distinguished themselves with great bravery and were each given land grants for service in the revolutionary war.

Miss Adams is related on her maternal side to the Holtzclaws, her grandmother as Miss Julia Holtzclaw, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Graham Holtzclaw, of Greensboro, having been a noted belle. She is also descended on her maternal side from the Thorntons, early settlers in Richmond county, Virginia, many of whom are outstanding figures in the history of the colonial days; three members having served as colonels in the colonial war; another, Matthew Thornton, being one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

William Hunter Adams, father of the bride-elect, has been prominently associated with the wholesale millinery interests in Atlanta for many years and is now president of the Adams Wholesale Millinery Co., of Cairo, Ga., is enthusiastic over the marriage of his daughter to the son of a prominent family in Atlanta. He was born in Fulton county and has spent most of his life in Atlanta. His grandfather, George Adams, was one of the largest land owners in Fulton county. He is also a descendant of the Howells and Sewells, of Atlanta.

Groom's Family. Mr. Ross is the son of Mrs. J. Billups, of Atlanta, and a grandchild of General Edward Cary Wallis, United States senator from Mississippi. He is a direct descendant of the Lamars and Ross' of Georgia, being a great-nephew of L. Q. C. Lamar, United States senator from Missouri, secretary of the interior during Cleveland's administration and chief justice of the United States supreme court.

Mr. Ross was educated in Atlanta schools, graduating from the Georgia Military academy as captain adjutant. Later he attended Georgia Tech. He is a member of the A. T. O. fraternity and a 32d degree Mason. He is now connected with the East Alabama Lumber company.

The marriage of Miss Adams and Mr. Ross will be an interesting event of September.

Hundreds Enter White Label Syrup Rhyming Contest

With hundreds of rhymes submitted by the poets and would-be poets of Atlanta, the White Label Syrup rhyme contest came to a close last night. E. H. Thrower, general manager of the Robinson Syrup company, of Cairo, Ga., is enthusiastic over the manner in which Atlanta has received the company's pure Georgia cane product and predicts continued, consistent sales in this territory.

"The advertising in The Atlanta Constitution," stated Mr. Thrower yesterday, "certainly served to focus attention on our product, White Label Pure Georgia Cane Syrup." This is indicated by the number of rhymes that were submitted in our $100 prize contest. We are confident that White Label has won many new friends in Atlanta.

The judges are now busy going over the rhymes to determine who is the winner of the $850 first prize, as well as the other prizes, totaling altogether $100 in cash. Announcement will probably be made in the form of an advertisement in this newspaper on Thursday, August 6.

Junior Department Arranges Pleasing Program for Season

The junior department of the Atlanta Woman's club has arranged a very pleasing program of activities for the coming season. Mrs. M. D. Farnham, chairman of this division, advises that, with the opening of the club season, tea-dances will be sponsored by the club for the older girls, hikes for the juniors, and games and parties for the very young members. In addition to these, the children will also take part in pageants and plays to be planned and given at future dates. There will also be classes arranged for them in music, art, dancing, handicraft, etc.

The members are at present being entertained at a series of swimming parties given for them at the Atlanta Woman's club pool, and every child enrolled in this department may have the privilege of entertaining a non-member guest once a month at the pool on a specified day.

A large number of the junior group and their friends were complimented at the club Tuesday with an enjoyable swimming party, and on Tuesday evening, August 3, the senior group will entertain their guests from 7 to 9 o'clock. On the following Tuesday, another group will be entertained.

Pride and Joy

While this organization is comparatively a new part of the club, it is broadening its activities, and is assuming an important role in club life. "The Juniors are the pride and joy, and truly the potential power of the Woman's club," said Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith, president of the club. "Through them we hope to perpetuate the high standards established by clubwomen, and to awaken in them a desire for the best things in life. The club extends its Juniors the opportunity to become an essential part of it. There they may receive the benefits of constructive work and organized play. They are our future citizens, and for that reason it is important that they be taught their true relationship to the life of any community. In showing our appreciation of their efforts, we accomplish a two-fold purpose. We encourage latent abilities, and inculcate in them a sense of responsibility. We want them to be healthy and happy—wisdom will come later; and if we can show them that the way to real happiness lies in service to themselves and others, we shall realize a worthy ambition."

The Junior division comprises three groups: Seniors, composed of young women from 14 to 20 years of age,

Park St. Paragraphs

The Missionary society of the Park Street Methodist church has combined all monthly meetings into one, for the summer months, and the members are enjoying these monthly meetings in the out-of-doors at Snap Bean farm. Mrs. B. M. Cross and circle No. 7 will have charge of the program for the August meeting.

The friends of Mrs. D. M. Therrell, president of the Park Street Missionary society, are sympathizing with her in the serious illness of her husband who recently underwent a serious major operation.

The Mothers' class of the Sunday school enjoyed a "watermelon cutting" at the Wren's Nest, the occasion being the monthly business meeting of the class for July.

During the summer months the vice-president of the missionary society is holding cottage prayer meetings in the homes of our "dormitory." These meetings have been well attended and a great spiritual uplift to those who attend is the result.

Each Sunday morning at the Sunday school hour, some representative from the various departments brings a five-minute talk to the entire group on assigned subjects. Last Sunday Miss Elizabeth Medlock was the speaker. These young people are showing the elders that they are doing some deep thinking and are presenting their thoughts in graphic word pictures on the issues of the day.

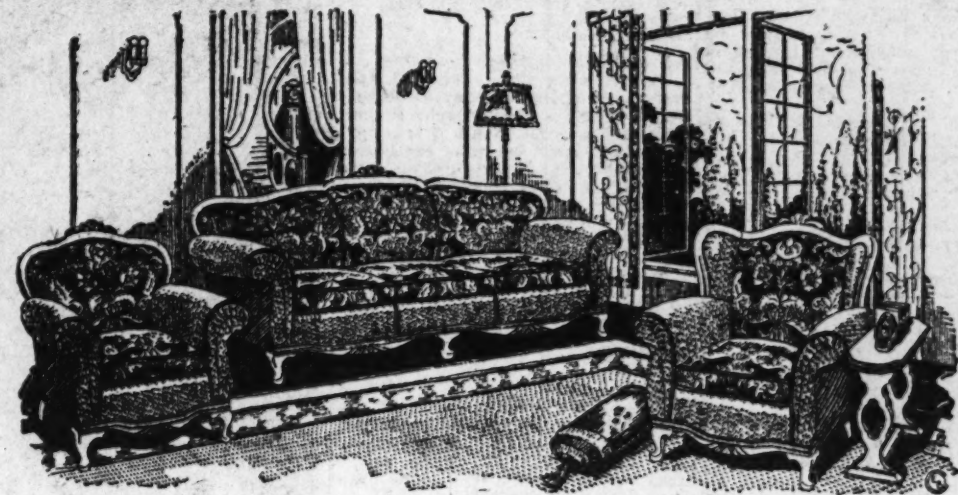

The Mothers' class is growing so nicely that new quarters for it has been a serious question before the building committee. Arrangements have been completed for a portable annex to be erected for this class and one for the Grange roll. These will make the work of the entire Sunday school more efficient.

Mrs. Tully Brooke Reports 2,723 Hospital Bandages

The regular meeting of the Women's Civic club of West End was held in the clubhouse and followed the session of the executive body, Wednesday afternoon. Mrs. Edward H. Smith, president of the club, presided. The assembly singing was led by Mrs. M. Herzberg with piano accompaniment by Miss Helen Herzberg. An outstanding feature was the report given by the hospital committee with Mrs. Tully Brooke as chairman, who reported that 2,723 bandages were made during July and August 1925. This committee is rapidly following the precedent set by the former hospital division whose achievements under the capable leadership of Mrs. C. C. Shipley were unsurpassed. During her administration a total of 30,000 dressings were made for Grady hospital and other contributions to similar causes have brought cheer, comfort and material aid. Mrs. Arthur Merrill announces that the automobile committee would sponsor a picnic on Saturday afternoon, August 7, to be given at the country home of Mrs. Merrill in Roswell. A personal invitation was extended by Mrs. Merrill to all club members together with their friends and families. Members will leave the club rooms at 2:30 o'clock and bring a basket lunch.

Mrs. Smith announced a mammoth bridge party to be given at the Ansley on Thursday afternoon, August 12. Mrs. R. H. Caldwell was named chairman of draw prizes and Mrs. R. T. Connolly chairman of table prizes. Reservations will be in charge of Mrs. C. C. Chamberlain and Mrs. Myers Loveless.

Monday evening between 8 and 10 o'clock the club will keep open house. Mrs. C. C. Berry, hostess, cordially invites all members and their friends to attend.

A musical program followed which was arranged by Mrs. Z. Herzberg. The program included two violin selections, "Meditation" by Thais and "Thine Own" by Lange, rendered by Miss Isabel Biggers. Miss Mildred DeLoach, who was the accompanist, concluded the program by giving Schubert's "Serenade."

Bridge Party.
One of the most enjoyable affairs of the past week was the bridge party given on Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the club rooms. Mrs. R. H. O'Kelly, chairman of home economics, assisted by Mrs. T. S. Sells, were the hostesses.

Dinner-Dance At Athletic Club.

The Saturday evening dinner-dance at the Atlanta Athletic club assembled a large number of members and friends. Among those who entertained at parties were Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Costley, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Sams, Wallace Bailey, J. L. Brannon, A. W. Brewerton, R. E. Hodgson, John Bennett and R. L. Barnett, of Memphis, Tenn.

West End Woman's Club Features Literary Program at Meeting

The literary program of the West End Woman's club Wednesday afternoon proved a unique study on "The Short Story." Mrs. J. H. Legien presented a most interesting paper on "How to Write a Short Story" and Miss Elizabeth Young's discussion on "The Book of Esther—My Favorite Short Story" was enthusiastically appreciated. Mrs. O. J. Hule received the prize offered in the short story guessing contest, a handsome volume of "Short Stories." The program was arranged by Mrs. C. P. Connolly, literary chairman.

Following the literary program the regular business meeting of the club was held, at which time the committee chairmen gave splendid reports. Mrs. Julius Spier chairman of the hospital committee, reported 4,900 bandages completed during July. The child's welfare committee, Mrs. J. S. Nunnally chairman, gave a wonderful report on the work being done at the Atlanta child's home. Mrs. O. J. Hule was appointed chairman of the booth for the Southeastern fair, and Mrs. Charles R. Cunningham, was made the chairman for forest-meet day, September 25. Mrs. Martha E. Ryckley has been appointed forestry committee chairman.

The club voted to vacate on August 1 the present club rooms on Lee street. All future meetings in the meantime, pending completion of the handsome club house on Cascade road, about October 15, will be held at the homes of the club members. Proper announcements will be made through the press of various meetings. The next regular meeting of the club will be held on Wednesday afternoon, August 11, at 3 o'clock, at the home of the president, Mrs. Chester W. Johnson, 635 Cascade avenue.

Friday Bridge Party.
Mrs. Zack Layfield and Mrs. J. J.

Edwards were hostesses at a bridge party, Friday afternoon sponsored by the Tallulah Falls and art committee of the West End Woman's club, assembling a large number of club members and their friends. Interesting contests and other entertainments were offered and a number of lovely prizes given. Miss Myrtle Belle Durham, Miss Mary Connolly and Mrs. Arthur McCrary gave a delightful musical program. The scholarship committee, Mrs. J. M. Luskford, chairman, reports an unusually large number of applications, and is arranging for additional scholarships to supplement the various attractive ones already tendered to the club.

Mrs. Howard Askew Is Dinner Hostess.

Mrs. Howard Askew, of Decatur, entertained at a dinner party in honor of her cousin, Mrs. J. C. Underwood, of Jackson, Miss. Those present were Mrs. M. F. Kirkpatrick, Mrs. Wallace Simpson, Mrs. S. S. White, Mrs. W. W. Childs and Mrs. Underwood. Misses Clara and Margaret Askew assisted in entertaining.

Report of State Director, C. of C.

It has been a great pleasure in serving you as state director for the past eight months although I feel that I have realized so little.

Since my term of office began I have registered 166 new members which proves that the chapters have been striving to put Georgia in the lead in the C. of C. work. In discharging my duties I have written 172 letters, 39 post cards, 48 programs and have sent state letters to all chapters, officers and U. D. C. officers. The following are chapters which have sent in new members:

Athens, 16; Margaret A. Wilson chapter, Atlanta, 15; Abbeville, 7; Camilla, 22; Dawson, 4; Dublin, 13; Decatur, 2; Elberton, 24; Jackson, 5; Lexington, 3; Marietta, 3; Millersville, 16; Roberts, 17; Savannah, 5; Valdosta, 4.

Through the state organizer, Miss Adeline Baum, two new chapters have been organized, Camilla and Abbeville. I am sorry to say that I have only heard from 16 chapters out of 37. This makes it very trying on me when the chapters don't communicate with me, for I can't say whether they are active or inactive. They should all at least acknowledge my letters. I have signed certificates and have not received any papers or certificates from three vice presidents general since April, although one said she had mailed papers to the state president.

Please see that your papers are properly filled out and signed and enough postage on same before sending to me. I never keep a paper in my possession over 12 hours unless from some providential cause.

Too much credit cannot be given Miss Baum for her untiring efforts in this wonderful organization. May you appreciate her as you should.

I wish, dear children, that you would only realize the great importance of this grand and noble organization for your children today are our U. D. C. leaders of tomorrow. There is no better time to begin leadership than now.

The Georgia division should be very proud of our dear Miss Mary Radford, of Dublin, Ga., who is taking the advantage of our Mildred Rutherford scholarship. I am sure most of you saw in The Constitution where she was voted the most intellectual girl at LaGrange Female college.

I want to thank each one of my state officers for their loyal support. They have been faithful in discharging their duties. I just wish each C. of C. was as enthusiastic as these leaders.

Faithfully yours,

MRS. W. T. BANKSTON,

Roberts, state director, C. of C.

Mrs. Humbert Watson Chosen President Of Ben Hill Chapter

A number of news items clipped from the Fitzgerald papers gave evidence that the work of the Ben Hill chapter, U. D. C., of that progressive south Georgia city, has been ably looked after during the late spring and summer months.

Appropriate exercises were held in the First Baptist church on Memorial day under the leadership of the president, Mrs. Wade R. Lasseter. The address was made by Mrs. Betts, of Ashburn, and loving and appropriate talks, readings, songs and music gladdened the hearts of the to be honored veterans of the sixties who occupied the front row. The attendance was splendid, and after the exercises at the church the graves of the south's honored dead who sleep in Graceland cemetery were garlanded once more.

Following close on Memorial day came the May meeting, which was held at the home of Mrs. J. H. Mayes. At this meeting the concluding business for the year was disposed of A rising vote of thanks was given the retiring president, Mrs. Wade R. Lasseter, for the efficient and conscientious work she had done for Ben Hill chapter during the two years she had served as president.

Mrs. W. G. Broadhurst, chairman of the nominating committee, then submitted the following list of officers for the ensuing year, and these were unanimously elected: Mrs. Humbert Watson, president; Mrs. S. G. Pryor, Sr., vice president; Mrs. Chester Strickland, recording secretary; Mrs. R. I. Moffett, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Newton Mathis, treasurer; Mrs. Lott Dickey, historian; Mrs. L. J. Geisner, registrar; Mrs. Howard Beall, parliamentarian; Mrs. S. G. Pryor, Jr., reporter.

Mrs. Lasseter, the retiring president, then escorted the new president to the chair, and after speaking a few words of appreciation of the high honor in which she had just been elected, and urging the members present to rededicate their efforts to a greater new south, a greater Georgia and a greater Fitzgerald, the meeting was turned over to the program committee, and a wonderful program gave a fitting close to one of the best years the chapter has ever enjoyed.

During the unprecedented celebration that the citizens of Fitzgerald gave on the Fourth of July a float entered by the Daughters of the Confederacy graced the immense parade that so beautifully filled through the entire main part of the city on that historic day.

North Atlanta O. E. S. Celebrates Birthday.

The 30th anniversary meeting of the north Atlanta chapter, No. 38, O. E. S., Monday evening, was attended by a large assembly of Stars, Masons and friends. Readings by Mrs. Jensen and Mrs. King were enjoyed. The birthday cake, with 33 candles, was brought in by Mrs. Harriett Carpenter, the first worthy matron. The candles were lighted by past matrons and patrons. Mrs. Carpenter gave a poem appropriate for the occasion.

C. of C. Chapter Reports

ELLEN CRAWFORD, ATHENS.

Our chapter has held monthly meetings the first Monday of each month with very interesting and instructive programs, with each member telling something of their grandfathers or some Confederate soldier or some historical fact.

Miss Mildred Rutherford is the hub of our wheel and we have been inspired by her history of the south and the war between the states, and since we are so near her, we have imbibed some of her inspiration and enthusiasm and have used her scrapbook which gives the real facts and truths of history as our guides in our programs.

As to some of our activities of the past year: The coin drive was thrust very suddenly upon us by the governor's proclamation and during examination. However, we did the best we could under the circumstances. Our goal was 100 and I believe when we have been accredited with all that belongs to our efforts we will have reached that number.

We gave our annual garden party in June and it was quite a success. Coming during the university commencement program, there were many distinguished visitors scattered on the beautiful lawn of Miss Mildred Rutherford's home. "The Villa" meeting and greeting one another. Enough money was raised for a large Confederate flag, for which purpose the entertainment was given.

The new members, which were 16 in number, were called into line and officially presented to the old members. There are eight more new members whose papers are being filled out and we might call them our own now, making a total of 24 new members.

We sent valentine boxes to the old soldiers at the home and hope to remember them at Christmas time. We observed Memorial day, attending the memorial exercises in a body, afterwards placing laurel wreaths on the soldiers' graves.

We have paid our state dues and contributed to the Mildred Rutherford scholarship. For the coming year we hope to perfect a program for Memorial day and will take charge of the monument at the cemetery gate.

A flag and flag pole will be erected between the two monuments in front of the campus by two children of the Confederacy and the Ellen Crawford chapter will own its own flag.

We recommend that each chapter have a quarterly paper, or even two papers, so that we may know what the others are doing. The Ellen Crawford chapter will issue its quarterly very soon and it will be called "The Torch of Truth."

We also recommend that each chapter have a scrapbook of its achievements. This chapter has one already in the making. Let others take it up and there may we have a friendly spirit of rivalry as to whose will be the banner. Our leader, Mrs. Lamar R. Lipscomb, was planning to come with us from others, but was prevented. She sends her love and good wishes for a successful convention.

HATTIE POTTLE, MILLEDGEVILLE.

We have 37 members, 16 new members. We won $10 prize last year for largest new chapter. We entertained U. D. C. at an open session with a General Lee program in January and assisted with a program on Lee's birthday, serving luncheon to the veterans. We assisted with dinner for the veterans on Memorial day, assisted with a program and helped decorate veterans' graves. We have one state officer, historian. We had presented to us by the president of the U. D. C. a beautiful Confederate flag, also by Mrs. E. E. Bell and Mrs. Goodman buttons and badges with the name of the chapter on them.

WOODROW WILSON, ROBERTA.

We are sorry to say, but our report will fall far short of last year's report, due to the fact that our director moved away in January and could only meet with us once a month.

We were delighted to have the honor of entertaining the state conference last year and we hope each one present enjoyed themselves as much as we did having them.

Number on roll 1925, 83, new members 17; total 100. Money paid out for convention expenses $78.55. We sent a sofa pillow and pair of silk socks to each veteran in our county Christmas.

Our chapter observed Georgia day and during the service our chapter presented to the school "Facts About Georgia," by Miss Millie Rutherford. Sent 18 sofa pillows to veterans at Soldiers' home in Atlanta.

We have $12 on hand to buy markers for veterans' graves; when these are purchased we will have special exercises as we did last year. Mrs. McKenzie has already consented to be with us on this occasion and deliver address.

We have won two years in succession P. drive loving vase for greatest number of members on percentage basis according to size of town, also Adeline Baum banner for best report of chapter under 10,000 population.

Seven members of our chapter entered declamation contest. Little Emily Walker, only 7 years of age, was given special mention. Her piece was so splendid that Miss Baum gave her a medal in memory of her father, N. B. Baum.

Miss Louise Jones presented our chapter with a "French book" that her father, Dr. J. V. Jones, and Sidney Lanier studied together during the war, also two letters written by Alexander H. Stevens. These relics are to be placed in the Georgia room at Stone mountain when completed.

Our chapter presented to Miss Baum a National C. of C. pin last year during the conference for her love and untiring efforts for the Confederate cause.

Although our town is small, we hope to have you with us again in the near future.

ANNA S. FULTON, DECATUR.

The chapter has paid dues this year on 55 members, an increase of four over last year. The average attendance at meetings has been 20. The children are enthusiastic and answer every call made upon them by their mother chapter, Agnes Lee.

At Thanksgiving, Christmas and in June the chapter members went in a body to the Soldiers' home and carried good things to eat. The finances of the chapter are in very good shape, as we have in bank about $40. The treasurer is absent from the city, so I cannot give an exact financial report, but I know that we have paid state dues and contributed $5 to the Rutherford scholarship.

Officers for the chapter for the year 1926-27 are: Martha Johnson, president; Mary Greene, vice president; Margaret Ridley, secretary; Elizabeth Johnson, treasurer; Frances Jackson, historian; Mary Jackson, press chairman; Mrs. J. C. Johnson, director.

Two of the medals offered by Agnes Lee chapter in the local schools for the best essay on the Confederate flag were won by members of the Anna S. Fulton chapter this year.

Confederate Veterans To Be Entertained.

The Confederate veterans of Atlanta and Fulton county will be entertained with a picnic and barbecue at Grant park on August 3 by members of Fulton chapter, U. D. C. All members of the five U. C. V. camps in the city and other Confederate veterans in Fulton county will be honored guests and are invited to come and spend the day. Many entertaining features have been provided for the guests. Several distinguished men who are interested in the cause of the Confederate veterans will be present and make addresses. Exercises will commence at 10 o'clock and lunch will be served at 12:30 o'clock, with the younger members of Fulton chapter acting as waitresses.

Arrangements have been completed and different committee chairmen state that the veterans will have one of the best entertainments ever given to them.

Mrs. Armor Invited Back to New Zealand

By M. FRANCES MEADORS

Mrs. Mary Harris, of Macon, world W. C. T. U. lecturer, as well as president of the Georgia W. C. T. U., has just received an invitation to spend six months lecturing on prohibition in New Zealand in 1928.

The invitation came from the New Zealand alliance, which is composed of all of the men's and women's church and civic temperance organizations in that dominion.

Mrs. Armor toured New Zealand in 1922, making temperance lectures under the auspices of the New Zealand W. C. T. U., the largest women's organization in that country. She made friends for herself and for the cause she represented everywhere she spoke, and now they are soliciting a return engagement of longer duration.

C. Edmund, of the alliance, stated that they desired to have her especially to address women's clubs, drawing room meetings, in addition to lectures in halls and churches.

Mrs. Armor has a standing invitation from the Australia W. C. T. U. to speak for them, and she will probably accept both invitations and continue her tour around the world to visit other countries where the W. C. T. U. is organized.

Mrs. Armor already has an invitation to speak at the convention of the Canada W. C. T. U. at Vancouver this fall if Mrs. Gordon Wright, of London, Ontario, can set the time when she is not engaged to be the speaker at conventions and rallies in Illinois, Missouri, Wisconsin, Colorado, Wyoming, Nevada, Montana, North and South California (there are two state unions in California).

Mrs. Armor will also speak at the Georgia convention in Gainesville on October 26-28.

This popular Georgia prohibition speaker has been forced to decline more invitations to make addresses than she finds time to accept.

Hawkinsville Enjoys Good Program. Mrs. Roscoe Bembry was hostess to the Hawkinsville W. C. T. U. on Tuesday afternoon at Bembry's mill.

Prominent Guests Honored With Parties at Woman's Club

Among the distinguished out-of-town guests presented by Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith, president of the Atlanta Woman's club, at its regular Friday afternoon tea, were Mrs. George Curry, of New York, wife of the director of the Paramount film school, of which Miss Marion Ivy Harris, talented Atlanta screen artist, is a graduate, and Mrs. Georgia Dunmire, member of the chamber of commerce of Nashville, Tenn.

The club was beautifully decorated in summer flowers and foliage, through the courtesy of Mrs. G. H. Brandon, flower chairman, and an enjoyable program of music was given by Miss Helen Battle and her sister, Miss Marion Battle, during the tea. The artists were introduced by Mrs. Mary Butts Griffith Dobbs, music chairman.

Mrs. Curry gave an interesting talk on the subject of training for future film stars, and Mrs. Dunmire spoke on the value of women's clubs as a civic asset.

Mrs. Price-Smith also introduced Mrs. Caroline Eichberg, one of the charter members of the club, who has been out of the city a number of years. Mrs. Eichberg has rejoined under the administration of Mrs. Price-Smith, and Mrs. Smith voiced her appreciation and that of the club in having its pioneers return.

Mrs. Smith also urged all members and their friends to attend the Marion Ivy Harris ball at the Biltmore hotel on Tuesday evening, August 3.

This promises to be a gala affair, stated Mrs. Smith, and affords an opportunity for all to welcome this gifted young Atlanta girl, who has made such excellent progress in her chosen profession. A feature of the ball will be a number of "stunts" put on by Miss Harris and her associate artists, which will add much to the evening's entertainment.

Mrs. Seth B. Mellen's Party. Mrs. Seth B. Mellen will entertain twelve guests at ten, honoring Mrs. H. J. Walters and her two visitors, Mrs. Lochridge and Miss Elizabeth Lochridge, of Kentucky.

Mrs. Wilson Honored. Mrs. John T. Hancock was hostess.

"We are co-laborers together with God."—I. Cor. 3:9.

Good Reading.

Sing me the songs of a nation and I'll tell you its character—said somebody. Someone else said a people is judged by its women. These statements may be true, but undoubtedly the literature of a people indicates its ideals and discloses its thought. The Bible says of a man, "As he thinketh in his heart so is he," and "out of the heart proceed evil thoughts."

The inner man—the part of him that counts, the part that lives and never dies—is fed and sustained largely by what he reads. How careful should we be, then, in the selection of our reading—especially for our children. While their characters are in the formative stage they respond to both evil and good. The evil one in concrete form presents himself constantly and persistently. He is inescapable and he is alluring. Only a mind trained to recognize evil can combat it. If the cultivation of a taste for good reading is begun early in life, and the association with that which is uplifting and pure in literature is made the habit of the home, it will fortify our children against the insidious attacks of Satan. The low and vulgar will be distasteful to them.

We may be sure of one thing—our children are going to read something. The responsibility of providing the right thing is as much the duty of the parent as is the providing of proper food for their bodies. Some years ago a cereal company advertised, "Tell me what you eat and I'll tell you what you are." More surely can we say tell me what you read and we will tell you what you are.

MRS. C. S. STRONG, Superintendent of Publicity, North Georgia Conference Woman's Missionary Society, M. E. Church, South.

Along the Highway of Success.

Mission study is becoming more and more popular in the Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist W. M. S. Even the very warm days do not hinder its progress as was clearly demonstrated Tuesday, July 20, when the members of the Pollard and the Fanny E. Heck Mission study classes motored out to Gilmore on the Marietta road to be the guest of the teacher, Mrs. J. W. Willis, at a "spend the day" party.

It was a glorious occasion, studying Marie Buhlman's simple sweet story of "Service Along the Highway of Life." The entire book was studied carefully and the members were made ready for the examination test.

The following members were present: Miss Matty Clements, Mrs. D. W. Key, Mrs. Owen C. McConnell, Mrs. George Brown, Mrs. T. T. Ballenger, Mrs. A. B. Caldwell, Mrs. Mrs. A. E. Culler, Mrs. W. W. King, Mrs. B. M. Wooley, Mrs. Sanford, Mrs. J. W. Willis and Mrs. Lillian W. Moore.

A delightful luncheon was served at small tables. Mrs. Willis, who is the teacher of mission study in Ponce de Leon W. M. S., plans another "spend-the-day" party in August at her home on Myrtle street, in which the last book of the course will be taken, "Cuba for Christ." Members and friends are urged to make plans for this event in order to have a day entirely free for this study.

LILLIAN W. MOORE.

Oakhurst Baptist W. M. S.

When circle No. 3, of Oakhurst W. M. S., had charge of the monthly program, Mrs. T. H. Wing gave an interesting talk on "Fruitful Lives." There were 13 present and the meeting was greatly enjoyed. Circles 3 and 4 spent a pleasant day recently at Hapeville, sewing for the children of the Georgia Baptist Orphan's home.

MRS. E. R. CARSWELL, Jr., Press Chairman.

Georgia Baptist Women Finishing Great Campaign

Baptist Women Finish a Big Task.

Georgia Baptist women threw their full organized strength into the forward missionary movement of 1919—the 75-million campaign—with an abandonment of daring faith in God's leading and God's enabling. With prompt and hearty accord the nearly 2,000 societies, including junior auxiliaries, committed themselves to the full world task, big with promise of a new day in the denominational life, because of true and larger ideals of Christian stewardship and ministries—there was generally hilarious pledging to the five-year program of $2,212,015—an amount exceeding total gifts to missions during the 38 years of organized effort, and exceeding the amount apportioned Georgia W. M. S. by the general commission. This apportionment, $1,500,000, has been met, but our pledges are our goal.

With the coming of September we enter the last quarter in the last year of the campaign. Only three months remain in which to finish the task to make sure the victory. Sharing the southward heroic effort and holy purpose to redeem in full all pledged by December 1, Georgia women are rallying their forces, recruiting in associational, district and local groups, achievements and victories won, and renewing vows of loyalty to the holy crusade even to the point of genuine sacrifice.

The Stimulus of Success.

Whatever the final record in money gifts may be, the five-year program of cooperative endeavor has brought signal spiritual victories and success, which are not to be measured or appraised by material figures and standards. No greater blessing can flow into the soul of this generation than its rescue from materialism and pseudo philosophies which steal away pure faith and atrophy the finer senses of the soul. Good for young America to learn with fine emphasis that "the area of freedom can never exceed the area of faith," and that we must expand the inner souls of men before we can produce civic heroes. The mission of the church is primarily to the end of time to minister to humanity's spiritual needs. Let us not fail to magnify the spiritual triumphs of the campaign and accept them as the highest evidence of God's approval and leadership. More than one-half million men, women and young people in the same lands, and nearly 50,000 on foreign fields have been led out of the darkness of sin into a new life, born from above through faith in Christ. Georgia alone, directly through efforts of missionary societies during the closing year, 1,779 conversions were reported. 1,600 Bibles distributed, 600 classes of adult literates taught. All of the 119 schools under Southern Baptist control have been enlarged in an effort to answer the calls of an enlarging army of young people for more light and larger horizons of life.

Other evidences of an enlarging spiritual life are the organization of 1,646 new churches, the erection of 2,321 new houses of worship, the launching of 3,635 new Sunday schools, and organization of 9,871 new W. M. S. societies.

More than $45,000,000 has been expended in southern states in building and equipping churches and Sunday school plants. The enlarged sense of stewardship has led to larger ministry to the sick through 24 hospitals, and to homeless childhood in 19 orphanages.

In characteristic earnestness Dr. Truett is saying, "If ever the drum beat of duty sounded clearly to southern Baptists to hasten to the vast and constructive tasks that begin at our doors and reach to the uttermost ends of the earth that time is now. God lead us on!"

Alabaster Boxes. In response to appeals from greatly burdened leaders, to avert disastrous retrenchment and discouragement to missionaries, to save the denomination from humiliating defeat, the month of September has been set apart for concerted counsel and prayer in the southern territory. The 22,326 missionary societies are leading in these services. Wednesday, September 24, has been designated the special day of prayer and fasting for victory.

Many who have already redeemed their pledges are making in this crisis truly sacrificial gifts. Several W. M. S. secretaries from modest salaries and in addition to pledges are freely giving an extra month's salary. It is earnestly hoped that every Georgia Baptist woman will secure from state headquarters one of the small alabaster boxes and during these closing campaign months give through self-denial offerings made in these boxes will help Georgia W. M. S. redeem her entire pledge. Who will from honest, loyal hearts join with the apostle in the selfless declaration, "I count not my life dear unto myself, if I may finish my course," this God-appointed task—with joy.

Missionary Leader

MRS. L. M. AWTRY.

Mrs. L. M. Awtry, of Acworth, is the secretary for the Marietta district of the north Georgia conference Woman's Missionary society of the M. E. Church, South.

The district has gone forward steadily in all departments of the work since Mrs. Awtry took charge about four years ago and no one could be more earnest in her work and more faithful in the discharge of her duties as secretary than she is.

Not only the women of the district and conference appreciate Mrs. Awtry and the work she is doing but the preachers and laymen regard her so highly that in the recent district meeting held in Kennesaw, her name led the ticket of delegates to the annual conference and she received 99 votes, more than any other person in the entire district. This is probably the first time a woman has led the delegation to the conference of ministers and laymen.

Beside being a leader in missionary activities, Mrs. Awtry is a lovely mother, an active W. C. T. U. member and prominent in social affairs. —MRS. WALLACE ROGERS.

Bennett Memorial fund for the third quarter.

The society sponsored a barbecue on July 8 from which they realized $800 and this has been applied on the indebtedness of the church for building purposes.

Quite a nice sum has been realized through the plan of "silent money" which is money set aside and made to multiply itself through the talents of the women for cake-baking, candy-making, or whatever the talent may be.

On each birthday of one of the members, all members pay 10 cents to the society fund as a gift to the one who has the birthday and a penny is paid by each person for every rainy day. These make up the "rainy day" fund which is used to meet emergencies or make up deficits which may occur from time to time.

The members of the society have enjoyed securing names to be embroidered on a quilt at 10 cents per name. Some of the squares had as many as 12 names embroidered and when this quilt is finished will be record of interested members and friends to come.

With these varied activities for the purpose of raising money, the members of the church and society have come to know each other more intimately and have grown in love and grace. More than two-thirds of the membership have become actively engaged in the work of the society through these plans.

MISS EMMA HARRISON.

A splendid day is anticipated.

Briefly Told

Mrs. C. S. Strong, of Murrayville, superintendent of publicity for the North Georgia conference Woman's Missionary society of the M. E. church, south, expects to spend the month of August in Boston, where her brother, Dr. Bradford Kent, is very ill. The doctor's life is despaired of and Mrs. Strong is receiving the sympathy of her many friends.

Mrs. R. J. Atkinson, of Greenville, and Miss Bert Winter, of Bowersville, were in Atlanta during the past week to attend a meeting of the Bennett memorial committee of the North Georgia conference Methodist Missionary societies. The meeting was at the home of Mrs. J. N. McEachern, Sr.

Mrs. E. P. Peabody, of Macon, was in Atlanta recently, the guest of Mrs. Luke G. Johnson. Mrs. Peabody was en route home from Nashville, Tenn., where she attended the meeting of the board of mission of the M. E. church, south, of which she has been elected a member for the first time. She represents the South Georgia conference.

Mrs. J. F. Fowler, district secretary for the Dalton District Woman's Missionary society of the M. E. church, south, has been chosen delegate from her district to the annual conference which will be held in Atlanta in November. Mrs. Fowler will be a member of the conference for the first time since she has had the work of the district in her keeping only a year. Splendid work is being done and her election to this new honor attests to the appreciation of her work in the hearts of the people with whom she is working.

The members of the Missionary society of the Cornelia Methodist church were the guests of Mrs. I. C. Wade a few days ago for a spend-the-day study of Latin America. A splendid program was arranged. Mrs. Wade is well known in Atlanta and other Georgia cities and her friends know what Mrs. Wade's hospitality means.

In the Hiroshima Girls' school, Hiroshima, Japan, a graduating class which was 100 per cent Christian went out this year.

At a recent district meeting of Methodist missionary women, held at Wadley, Ga., little Virginia Donovan Evans, aged three months, was made a life member of the Woman's Missionary society of the M. E. church.

A letter has been received from Mrs. T. J. Lewis, honorary president of the Georgia Federation of Church Women, announcing the fact of her expected arrival home August 6 after a two months' visit to Los Angeles, California.

Mrs. A. F. McMahon, corresponding secretary of the Georgia W. M. S., and Miss Julia Allen, young people's leader, left yesterday (Saturday) for Blue Ridge, Georgia, to attend the Georgia Baptist assembly which convenes on July 31 and closes August 8. Both of these officials will be prominent speakers on the assembly program.

During the Baptist assembly at Blue Ridge, there will be a meeting of the board of trustees of the Mary P.

Federated Church Women Hold Quarterly Meeting

The quarterly meeting of the Federated Church Women of Georgia was held in the Davidson-Paxon-Stokes lunch room Tuesday afternoon, July 22.

The devotional, conducted by Mrs. D. I. Carson, Congregational editor, consisted of a short talk on the Fourth Psalm and an earnest prayer asking God's blessings on the work of the federation.

Mrs. Willis read a letter from Mrs. T. L. Lewis, honorary president, who is now in California, expressing her regret that she could not be at the meeting. Next to having this beloved woman present was to have her letter, glowing with her gracious personality and filled with her best wishes and encouragement.

The resignation of the corresponding secretary, Mrs. C. A. Mauck, was accepted with deep regret.

Miss Woodberry appointed the editors of the board to compose a committee to nominate a corresponding secretary to fill the unexpired term. The committee retired and in an incredibly short time returned to present the name of Mrs. Elijah Brown, who was unanimously and enthusiastically elected.

After an informal discussion as to the best methods of obtaining interesting news from all the churches of the state and from all church conventions, Mrs. Wallace Rogers spoke of the effectiveness of advertising in our conversation the page in The Constitution. She told of several prominent men who always read it and said that articles from the page are frequently copied by the Christian Advocate, published in Nashville.

Mrs. Henry Davis, president of the state missionary council of the Episcopal church, spoke interestingly and encouragingly of the work of the federation in the interest of church cooperation and unity of purpose.

Miss Woodberry told the board that as president of the organization she is frequently asked to induce movements of various kinds and asked for an expression of opinions from the members. A general discussion followed which showed that the board was unanimously opposed to taking any stand that is controversial or debatable. It was felt that the purpose for which the federation of churches was formed would be weakened, if not defeated, by such a course.

Mrs. Wallace Rogers presented Mrs. J. W. Setze, a new representative from the Methodist church, and Mrs. Phyllis introduced Mrs. Stauffer, wife of the pastor of the First Christian church.

The delightfully informal midsummer meeting was closed with a prayer by Mrs. Rogers.

The following women, representatives from five denominations, were present: Miss Rosa Woodberry, Mrs. D. I. Carson, Mrs. Wallace Rogers, Mrs. J. W. Willis, Mrs. Frank Woodruff, Mrs. J. W. Setze, Mrs. E. R. Graham, Mrs. Henry Davis, Mrs. Stauffer, Mrs. H. C. Phipps, Mrs. W. R. Stanley, Mrs. John Kerkis, Mrs. W. Harvey Clarke and Mrs. Edgar Craighead.

MRS. EDGAR CRAIGHEAD, Recording Secretary.

Willingham Industrial School for Girls, located at Blue Ridge.

At the Monday W. M. U. association meeting, held July 21 at Locust Grove church, on Marietta road, Mrs. E. M. Bailey, of Acworth, resigned as superintendent to the regret of her fellow workers. Mrs. Collins, of Acworth, well qualified in talent and personality, was elected as successor of Mrs. Bailey.

Mrs. Doris Knight, missionary to Kwangchow, China, has arrived on furlough after having spent seven years of splendid service on the foreign field. Miss Knight is now in her former home at Quitman, Ga.

Mrs. Joseph D. Rhodes, mission study chairman of Atlanta W. M. U., has returned from a visit to Alabama and is busy preparing for a mission study institute to be held in Atlanta the middle of August.

New Organization in the Gainesville District.

Mrs. J. G. Logan, district secretary for the Gainesville District Woman's Missionary society of the M. E. church, south, reports the following new organizations within the bounds of the district, all of which are growing and will, no doubt, develop rapidly into fine groups of societies.

An adult auxiliary at Blairsville was organized by the secretary and Mrs. Eula Colwell was chosen president. Mrs. B. H. Stone was named superintendent of children's work and immediately organized a junior group. Mrs. W. J. Thompson, of the Campton auxiliary, has organized a junior and a baby division in her church.

Miss Beulah May Odell organized the juniors at Oakwood.

Mrs. Kath Thompson has organized a splendid young people's society at Young Harris.

On last Sunday afternoon Mrs. Logan, assisted by the women of St. Paul, Gainesville, organized an adult auxiliary at a circuit group meeting in Lebanon. Mrs. C. B. Langford was elected president.

Center St. Methodist At Work.

The Woman's Missionary society at the Center Street Methodist church is having good attendance at the meetings during the summer months and is going forward with the work of meeting the goal for missionary societies in the conference.

Regular Bible study is conducted to advantage and the mission study book, "New Days in Latin America," is now being enjoyed. The use of posters is emphasized by adults and children with wonderfully interesting and helpful points being brought in this form.

This wide-awake auxiliary is busy on the Bennett memorial campaign and have reason to expect that their quota will be met in full before the end of the year.

Besides the activities in the missionary society, the women have made special effort on the part of salary recently and one of the Sunday school classes is helping to support a scholarship in Korea.

WOMAN COULD NOT SLEEP

Her Mother-in-Law Knew A Remedy

Mrs. Belle Thompson, of Georgia, was in a very weak and run-down condition for four years. She had great difficulty in getting to sleep at night and even then did not sleep soundly. She would wake up again and again. Besides this her appetite was poor. "My mother-in-law told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I was not the same woman at all. I could sleep and would get up in the morning singing and feeling fine. I am the mother of three children and always after the babies came I had to take treatments, but I can truly say that this last time I have only used the Menstrual Wash. It does me more good than the treatments. It keeps me on my feet to care for my children and I do most of my work. I feel it my duty to let you know how both of the medicines have helped me."—Mrs. Belle Thompson, R. S. Rossville, Georgia.

ONE BROKEN WHEEL CAUSED THIS—Collapse of a single wheel on one of the cars resulted in wrecking and splintering 35 freight cars of a 50-car train near Alexandria, Va. There were no deaths or injuries, but look at the mess. (Herbert)

INSURERS AT PLAY—Speediest members of the Atlanta Life Insurance Underwriters' association, who recently held their annual outing at Dixie Lakes, are shown breaking the tape at the end of a 100-yard dash. No records were shattered, however. Mrs. Allen G. Clark and Mrs. William Green hold the tape, and the fleet-footed guardians of the widow and orphan are H. M. Willett, Harry T. Adams and Harry I. Davis. (Rogers)

FRENCH WAR VETS PROTEST DEBT SETTLEMENT—Twenty thousand maimed and mutilated soldiers of France took part in this parade under the Arc de Triomphe as a silent protest against the American debt terms. Though the procession was orderly, violent demonstrations against American and other tourists became frequent shortly afterward. (Herbert)

THE BARBER'S FOE—For fifty years this resident of Homestead, Fla., a soap box evangelist, has not put shears to his "crown of glory." He'd make a first-rate floor mop, eh? (Herbert)

HOPE THEY'RE INSURED—Judging by the consumption of sandwiches, cakes and other edibles at the recent outing of the Atlanta Life Insurance Underwriters' association, a little health insurance wouldn't be at all amiss. These fair insurance lassies devouring chicken sandwiches and murmuring, "It ain't the premium; it's the principal of the thing," are Jeannette Jones, Lila Mason and Lois Brooks. (Rogers)

FLYING FOOL—Boy, look at this leap made by E. J. Dikeman, who jumped 23 feet, 2 1/2 inches to win the broad jump in the recent international track meet between English stars from Oxford and Cambridge and American bets from Cornell and Princeton. (Herbert)

MILLIONAIRE'S CHILD BRIDE AND HEIR—Mrs. August Laggren, the 15-year-old bride of the Plainfield, N. J., awning magnate, with their baby, born several weeks ago. Laggren is 51. The baby is Junior. (International)

MEET THE O'TOOLES—Bartholomew O'Toole, formerly of Chicago, with his wife, his maidservant and his ten offspring make up this imposing family group which has moved in a private car to their new home in Los Angeles. (International)

THANKS FOR THE BUGGY RIDE—Imagine the craning of necks and pointing of fingers when this "horseless buggy" of the vintage of 1902 made its appearance on the streets of Los Angeles proudly bearing the beaux in the brown derby and his girl friend in balloon sleeves and custard hat. (Herbert)

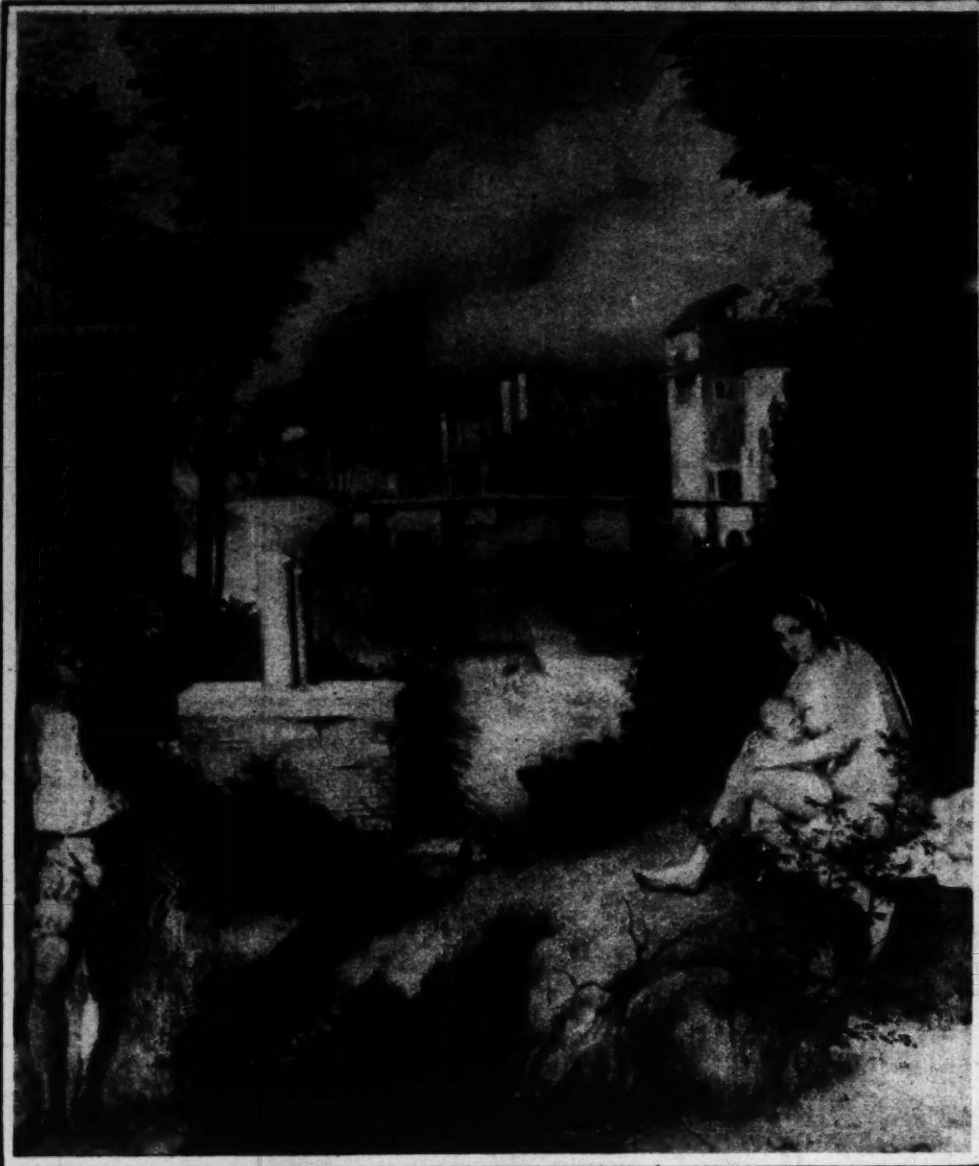

TINY AS BABY, DEVELOPS INTO GIANT—MENTALLY. Maurice Murphy weighed only 15 pounds when born and he was famed as the tiniest infant in Seattle. But, during his life in Los Angeles he has developed into a mental giant, and an all-round athlete. (International)

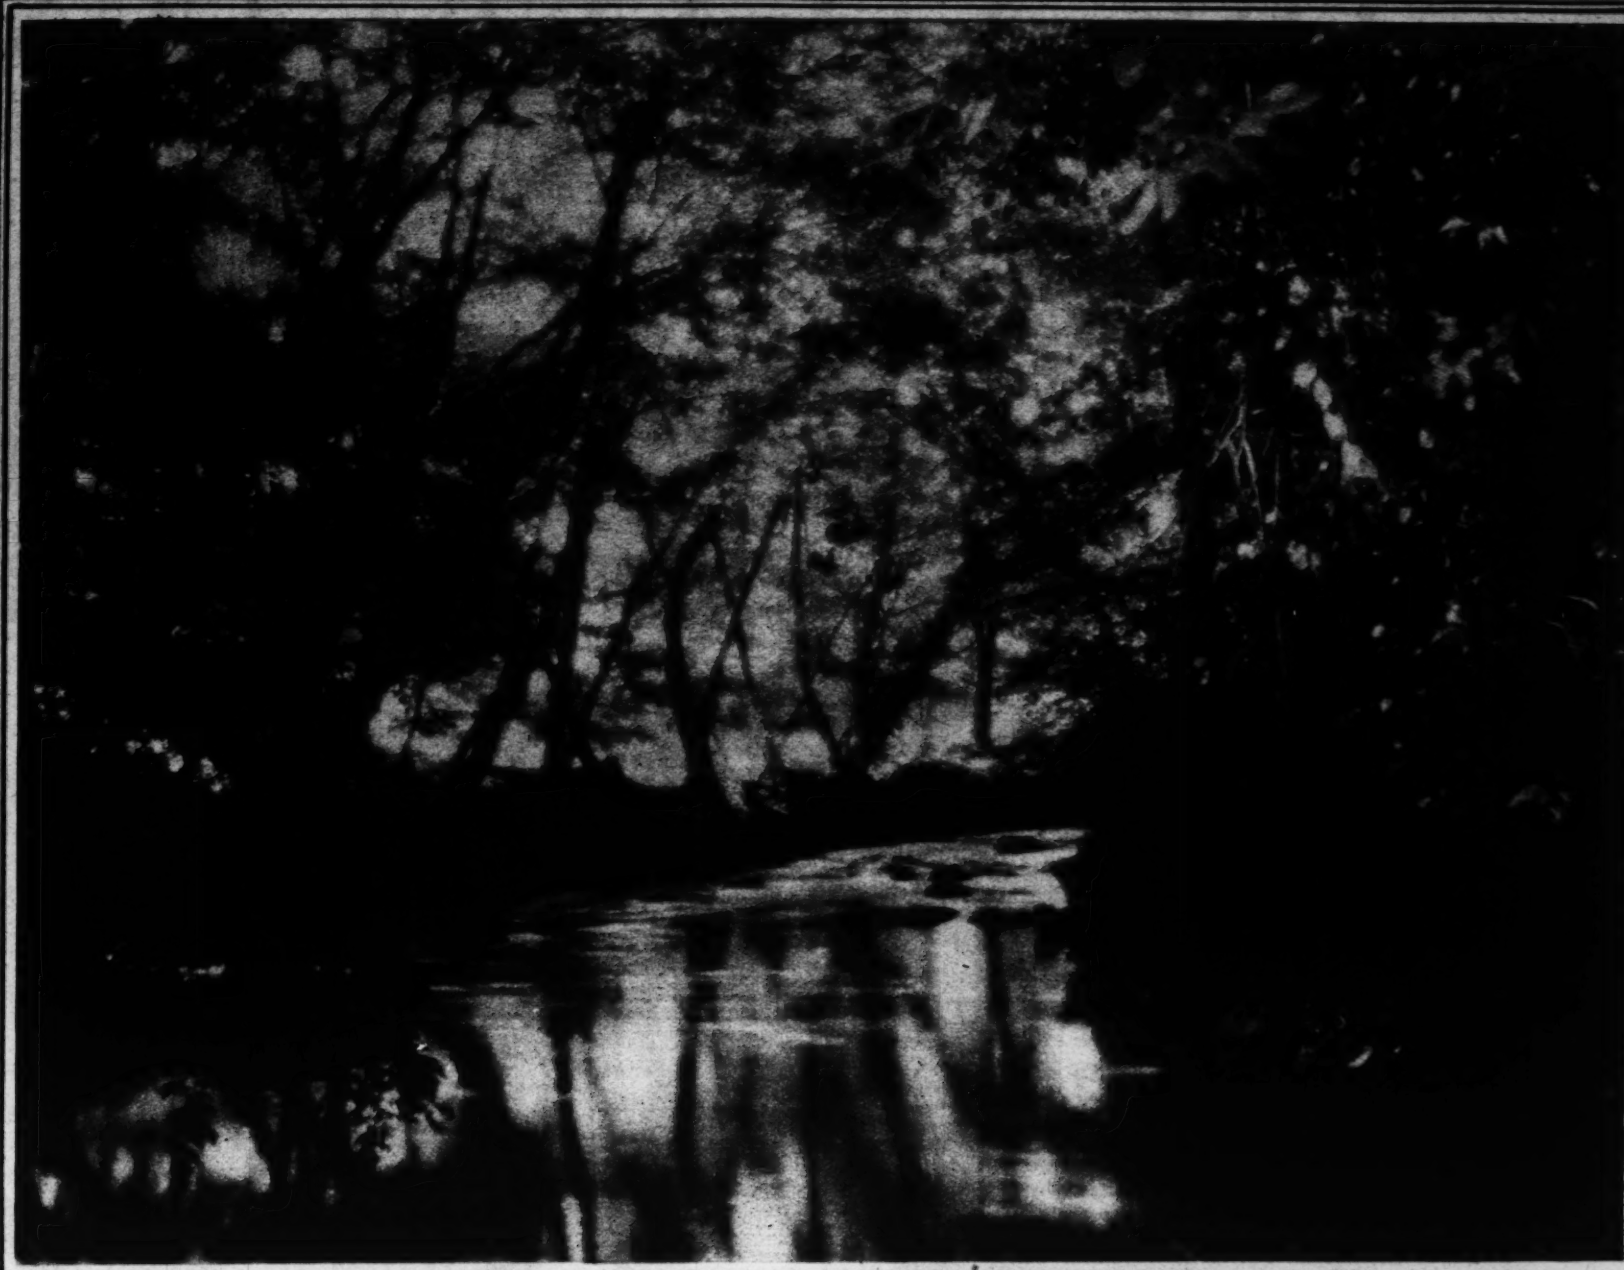

WELL, WHADDA Y' KNOW ABOUT THIS?—While Brooklynites outside sweaters in 100-degree weather, this work man in the Brooklyn cold storage plant wears an Eskimo costume and shivers in a temperature of eight below zero. (International)

AND THEY CALL THIS THE "SUNNY SOUTH," IT IS TO LAUGH—Came in pithy on this sweltering, drooping group in Park Row, New York city, looking hopelessly on a thermometer that registers a fraction under 100 degrees at 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon on the hottest July 21 in Gotham since 1855. Way down south breezes from the mountains and the sea were blowing. (International)

"ADRASTUS AND HYPISYLE"—one of the 52 paintings selected as the world's greatest masterpieces, was painted by Giorgione, and is the property of Giovanelli Palace, Venice. For story of the masterpiece, see today's Constitution Magazine.

DOCTOR OF CUTENESS—That's the degree held by little Miss Elenor Lambert Rankin, mascot of the class of 1926 at Agnes Scott college. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Rankin.

A DISCONTENTED COW—This bovine, used by an Oregon farmer to transport the family to county fair, b'gosh, probably gives sour milk. Er—er—beg pardon; he's a steer. (Herbert) TRAGIC MASKS OF LIFE—Alice Terry and Antonio Moreno, who play the lead in "Mare Nostrum," Rex Ingram's production for Metro-Goldwyn. An impression of tragedy, which dominates the undercurrent in the film, is created in this composite photograph.

Magic of the Movie Mill

Come for a visit behind the silver screen, where make-up shows palely; where stars are only humans, and where the romance and glamor of the finished celluloid is replaced by grinding work and clever tricks for the sake of effectiveness. Last year the Paramount junior star contest assembled in the Long Island movie training school more than a dozen, green, raw girls and boys, who for many months have been learning the intriguing secrets of the movies. Ivy Harris, Atlanta girl, was one of those selected for training, and with the other junior stars, she will appear this week at the Howard theater in "Fascinating Youth," a film, and on the stage in person at the same time in a John Murray Anderson spectacle, "Alice in Movieland." This year The Constitution presents young men and women of the southeast another opportunity to win to junior stardom with Paramount. Details of the event are published in this issue of The Constitution. Read them after you have visited movieland as it is in reality on this page.

TO BE A STAR YOU MUST BE A DANCING FOOL—Therefore, you are put through a lengthy course in dancing, with the director's eye particularly keen for gracefulness in every pose. Here are the junior stars as they will appear in "Alice in Movieland."

GREEN AT THE GAME—And getting a first test for screen adaptability. This is a photo of Miss Josephine Dunn, one of the junior stars, immediately after her arrival at the training school. You'll see the difference when you gaze on Josephine at the Howard this week.

WELL, NOW LET'S SEE—Thomas Meighan and Lella Lee, veterans of the films, hark back to the days of their striving after fame to answer a difficult question on proper methods of holding one's self while the arcs are spraying white light and the camera is clicking. Many and many of these problems arise in the life of a junior star, which isn't all roses, you may be sure.

CLOSE-UP OF THE PROPER WAY TO KISS—This is the movies' accepted way of kissing, sweet and graceful and that sort of thing. Everybody might study this picture and get a few good tips on how to keep the sleeves from wrinkling in an embrace; how to prevent the hair from getting tousled and that sort of thing. You know what it is.

OUT OF THE CORN BELT—But beauty counts more than geographical location. This charming brunette is Iris Gray, junior star who hails from Wichita.

A ROSE FROM BROADWAY—This dreamy-eyed junior star is Mona Paulina, of New York city.

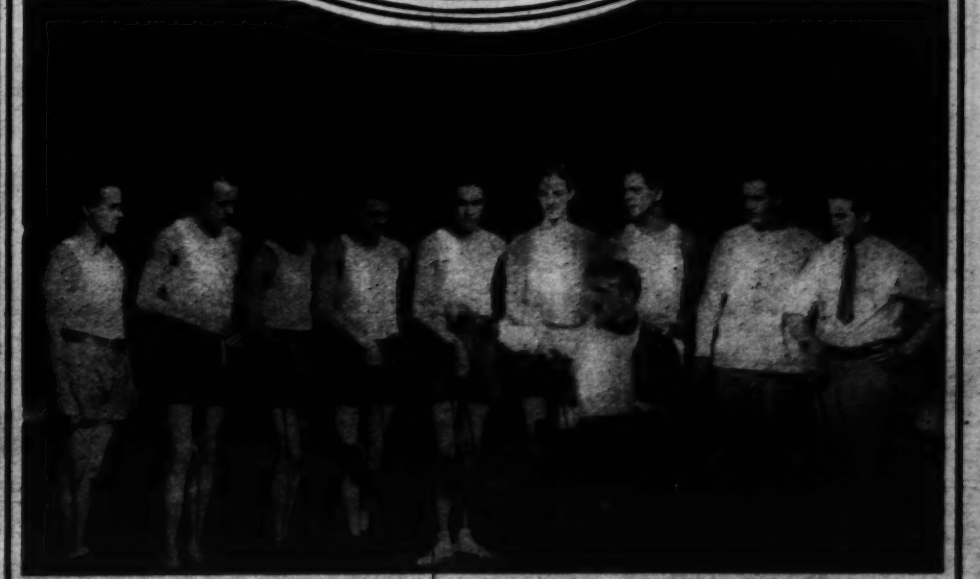

WATCH YOUR KNEES WHILE YOU'RE KISSING—Pity the poor movie performer. He can't even enjoy a good, whole-hearted squeeze without a flinty-hearted director butting in and telling the others to remember that you can't afford to relax and get all mussy over a mere caress.

ATLANTA'S BID FOR SCREEN FAME—Beautiful Ivy Harris, one of the Paramount junior stars on the road to fame and fortune.

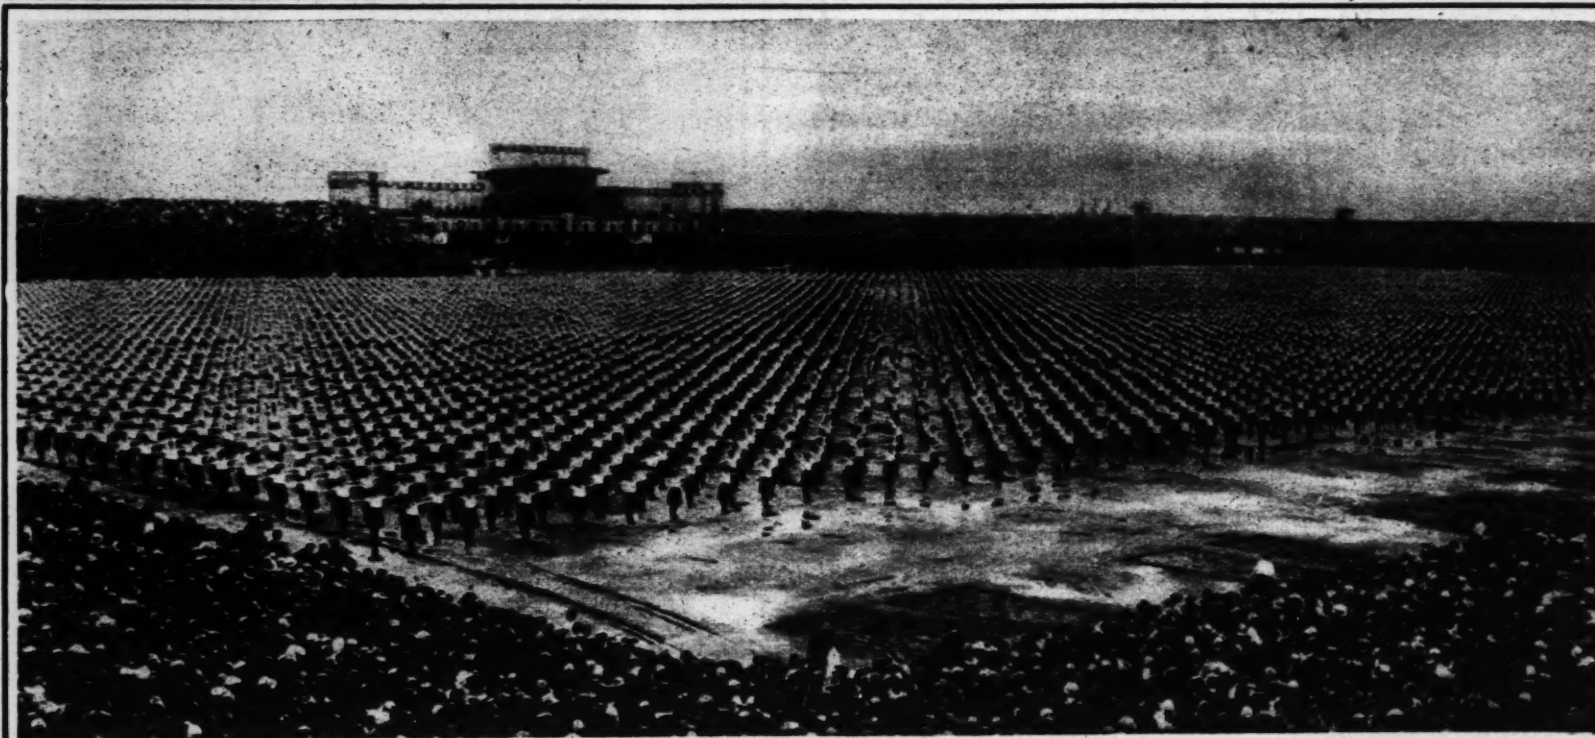

SHRINK, DARN YOU, SHRINK—That was the demand that was dinged into the ears of the starving, hard-working junior stars. Daily gym exercises for overweight ones and the same routine for the others in order that they might keep in keen physical form was insisted upon.

FUTURE HEROES MUST BE "MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRES"—In the Paramount studios these young men who promise to be future idols of fair fans are taught how to handle rapiers with grace first and supple wrists second.

AMPLE UNDERSTANDING—Suggestion for the movies and the stage. Why not give the tired business man a glimpse of such gigantic pedal extremities as these instead of the "twinkling toes" so popular with him. The cameraman who made this picture got the ladies' feet a little too close to the lens, hence the greatly magnified effect.

OPEN DOORS TOMORROW—The mammoth $3,000,000 home of Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s Atlanta branch on Ponce de Leon avenue which Monday will be formally opened for business. The photo was made while workmen were putting finishing touches to the beautiful structure, which is complete in every detail and stocked with a great array of merchandise of all kinds.

"You'll spoil her, daddy, taking the sail off, and she'll go better if you just weight her on the bottom."

His Son Was the Lodestar of His Life, a Guiding Light Even the Mist of Death Could Not Obscure MIND the day," old Jess Tiverton will begin, rolling his bit of dark plug in ludicrous fashion between his toothless gums, "I mind the day Sibley Carew shook a reef out of foresail in a hurricane of wind on Peter's Bank and ev'ry man was awounded."

Jess is always "minding the day." Then he'll squint up at you sideways from his trawl tubs and await a word of encouragement. If you know Jess and have heard the story you'll shut him off quickly.

"Fine day, Jess. Had any word from George Suttle?"

Or, more abruptly, if you lack reverence for an old man of the sea who has lived many of the experiences in the relating of which he takes a keen delight: "Pipe down, you old wharf kibby! I've heard that one three times now."

He'll shake his head at that last and return to overhauling gear. But in another minute, unless you've passed on, he's squinting up at you again, that same eager light in his gray eyes.

"Ever hear tell the Sassadowne? Thomas Bailey's boat in the days when young snipes kept a hot tongue between their teeth." Undaunted by rebuff, he's off again on another tack, charged with the spirit of the adventure vivid in his mind.

"Man, couldn't he sail her! Why say, I mind the day. . . ."

Old men, you know, and their talk. Old men of the fishing fleet are no exceptions. Rather, it seems, these fishermen, by nature given little to idle talk, grow suddenly more verbose than all the rest when the years begin to weigh heavily upon them and they are no longer young enough to work their shares of a trip.

Anywhere in the wide world where there is green harbor water and an son deeper and more subtle—Jess Tiverton became a hanger-on about the wharves.

His fishing days ended just about the time of the passing of old T-Wharf as the home of the Boston fleet. When the new fish pier was finished and the familiar boats began to tie up there, Jess began to haunt the place, finding for hands a little weakened and unsteady although yet skilled some measure of employment the remuneration for which was sufficient to keep him in chewing tobacco.

He became one of those talkative old men with always a ready story for an appreciative ear. Sail carriers? He has known them. Torrey Libbey and his Sue. Gene Ackerton and the Wanton Miss. John P. Doyle and his Flagaloon. And others.

Some of them sailed their masts out; some drowned themselves and their men; not a few of them are still alive. Best of all he likes to relate those stories of captains who refused to shorten sail on their well founded vessels. Many a trip of fish in a gale of wind he'll spin you and there's butter in your marrow if you fall to thrill to the telling. Driving masters, weak masters, shoat water men, good "fin" men and bad. He has known them all and about each, if you give him half a chance, he'll tell a story.

But there is one story Jess Tiverton does not tell. Hint, lead him with questions as you may, he'll pretend old age has caused him suddenly to become stone deaf. His turn then to parry.

"What's that, mister? Yes, a bit of swell on." It's the Blue Belle you've asked him about!

He'll maybe start mumbling to himself and you'll think him daft; others thought so once. He'll lift his eyes to the narrow neck of the harbor, gazing off down the channel course, watching for the glint of a sail he well knows.

One story Jess Tiverton never tells. The story of Jess Tiverton himself.

Ruth McKelvie was fair haired, wind freckled, straight as a young tree. It was her eyes probably, eyes as blue as the zenith of a winter sky at sea, which caught Jess Tiverton. She was twenty-five then, Jess turning forty-seven. After they were married Ruth continued to teach the fifth grade of the Bradley school in Winthrop while her husband sought fish with the Blue Belle, second best love.

You might suppose, considering the difference in their ages and education, that theirs was a course precarious, destined by all odds to end up on some submerged reef of incompatibility. It was not so. She was a woman wise in many ways and not without a knowledge of man's shortcomings. That which she gleaned beneath the surface of Jess Tiverton's rough exterior remained foremost in her vision when the false glamour of courting days had worn off. There was for her no disillusionment.

As for Jess, those were no doubt the happiest days of his life, short-lived days, to be sure, but made up in part for their brevity by their overwhelming sweetness. Very often it is true that a man who has not known womankind until comparatively late in life discovers in the companionship a happiness and understanding more complete than his fellows.

He was a good man on the fishing grounds; his was a well faring, contented crew, the Blue Belle one of the staunchest and fastest of the fleet's two-masters. Never a man to drive, he had yet accomplished much, and in the record of fish tonnage and quick trips his vessel stood high.

Never a man to drive; on the other hand, never a man to quibble. What orders Jess gave aboard ship were spoken in quiet tones save when necessity ruled otherwise. In the quality of his voice in those days, however, there was a note which commanded respect, and respect he had from his crew and his associates in the Banks fleet. And, for a long time, admiration also.

Tripper Tarboy, George Suttle and

one or two others will tell you that the two years of Jess Tiverton's married life were supremely happy ones. A strangely silent man for the most part heretofore, although good humored enough for a fishing master, he became a whistling, singing captain—an uncommon occurrence in the fleet—ready always to pass a little better than the time of day with any member of his crew, never hesitant in lending a helping hand where he deemed such aid to be needed. Not a marked change, for Jess Tiverton had never been other than a good fellow, but an obvious surface indication of an increasingly pleasant frame of mind.

A crew accepts its master as it finds him. Or finds another master. Give a fisherman an inch and he'll take just that. No more. The Blue Belle's crew took their captain's new happiness just as it was proffered them, nor attempted to encroach upon his good nature; they allowed that good nature to expand and envelop them. The results were immediately apparent. Jess Tiverton and his Blue Belle brought increasingly larger hauls of fish in shorter periods of time than ever before. There were no changes in the personnel of the vessel's crew, ever an indication to careful owners of a money-making boat.

The second autumn following their marriage, Ruth Tiverton failed to return to her teaching, and aboard the Blue Belle there ran a rumor that Jess had high hopes of a prospective member of his crew. The man himself, of course, made no allusion to the affair, but they marked that he ceased his whistling and was given to long periods of silent thought.

On December 17, when the Blue Belle had been two days only on Brown's Bank there occurred that which men who have grown old with Jess Tiverton still speak of in hushed tones and with a wagging of sage heads.

It was a fine clear day for winter fishing, a light breeze out of the southwest and a comparative calm upon the sea. Twenty-eight men of the vessel were over the side in their fourteen dories, the farthest of them not a mile away. They worked fast and sure, with a promise of Christmas ashore.

Jess was below; besides himself only his mate, George Suttle, a capable Gloucester man, and Farley Manser, the cook, remained aboard. A little past noonday Jess came up forward where Suttle was idly splicing cable line. Beneath the brown of the captain's features the mate distinguished an alarming pallor.

"Get your horn going," Jess ordered. "We're heading home."

Just like that! Two days on the Bank, a hold not beginning to fill with fish.

"You're sick?" Suttle asked.

"Don't ask me questions," Jess snapped. "Get your horn going!"

The mate, filled with wonder, complied—two long blasts on the fog horn repeated at intervals of a minute for five minutes.

To windward where the dories worked men ceased their pulling of trawl lines and themselves wondering, made a course for their ship standing plainly within sight.

In almost shorter time than it takes to tell, the Blue Belle's dories were aboard and stowed, the anchor broken out, mainsail foresail, jib and jack set and drawing and she was off for Boston.

Only a light breeze out of the southwest, as I told you, and it gave little evidence of growing stronger. Yet it was a homing wind and the Blue Belle, light in her ballast with only her ice, gave her lee rail to the sea and made off on a port run. A fast boat always, more so in a fair blow and to windward but speedy in any breeze, she was not fast enough for Jess Tiverton that day.

A changed man, he paced the windward deck of his vessel barking orders in a language the key to which they never believed he possessed. Now and again he took the wheel himself, trying to draw out of her every bit of speed of which she was capable. Fair time they made; no better.

About sunset the wind swung to the southeast and came on to blow, a strong breeze at first, with the darkness a moderate gale. The Blue Belle went hard over and as the seas began to make they broke steadily over her bows, racing aft across the gurry kids and smashing against the deck house. She needed a reef in jib sail then to keep her head up.

"Be better going if we clew in one forward," Suttle got up courage enough to suggest.

"You'll take no reefs, mister," Jess answered. "Not this night. She'll sail as she be, or she'll not sail at all. And I'll need no help as to her handling."

That was enough for Suttle. Enough for any man, for that matter. They sailed her that night with no reef in any sail while Jess stood his deck with neither food nor sleep. It blew a moderate gale, a half gale, a full gale, and Jess Tiverton, who no longer whistled and said kind words, cursed his crew to greater efforts. It was an all hands job with life lines rigged fore and aft, for nearly every sea was a breach, and no man slept. The wonder of it is she carried through without mishap of any kind.

That crew asked no questions, received no information. The men knew only that they must get home, that Jess Tiverton was in a hurry.

The Blue Belle beat up past the Graves at daybreak of as nasty a winter morning as you'd care to see. When she swung alongside T-Wharf, Jess was the first man off.

Some say he reached home before his wife died, that he was with her at the end, his strong, brown hands clasping hers. Others tell you Ruth died during that night. Jess himself never said.

There was a baby who could not live, the doctor predicted. Jess Tiverton thought otherwise. For three months he did not go to sea; when he sailed again Young Jess was as healthy as any youngster of his age, well cared for in the home of the captain's sister.

It early became apparent, following Jess Tiverton's return to his vessel, that his whole heart and soul were centered in his boy. The love and the adoration which had belonged to the woman with whom he had found happiness were transferred to Young Jess.

Never once aboard the Blue Belle did Jess make reference to the loss of his wife. Nor did he ever speak of that driving trip home in a gale of wind from Brown's Bank.

How had Jess Tiverton known that his wife needed him that day? The men of his ship asked that question among themselves, not of Jess. And the answer to it was ever a mooted one, although most agreed it could be traced to a premonition inspired by a knowledge of her condition. Perhaps Jess himself would not have answered differently.

The story of that trip got around, as such stories are bound to get around after a fashion, and it was told on other vessels out of Boston. All who heard had occasion some years later to recall it.

The Blue Belle's captain became a counterpart of his old self in the days before he had known Ruth McKelvie. Gone the whistling and singing; gone also the willingness to fraternize to such an extent with the members of his crew. A good skipper he remained. And a good "fin" man. Which covers the necessary qualities of a leader in the Banks fleet.

It was when his boy was about a year old that Jess first began to speak of him to George Suttle.

"I got a fellar growing up to home who's going to push you for your job some day," he told the mate one trip.

"Well, now, I wonder," George retorted. "Got sea legs yet? And a sense of fish?"

"Got big blue eyes like—like—Sea legs, hell! Wait till he's growed, man."

That was the nearest he ever came to mentioning his wife's name in Suttle's presence. But reference to the boy became an almost daily occurrence after that.

"Getting big," he'd say. "Ought to heft him now."

Times on a voyage he would converse with Tripper Tarboy, an old man who had sailed with him for years.

"Have to come up to the house and see him when we get home, Trip. Most as big as a trawl tub now. And strong as a gale of wind off Provincetown."

Old Tripper, who was lank and brown as an ancient mast and had a lower jaw shaped like the bow of a clipper ship, would nod his grizzled head in sympathetic understanding.

When the boy was six years old Jess Tiverton bought for him one of those little model sailboats which are the delight of every child. The next trip he was on Suttle's ear with an account of the happening.

"Held that boat in his hands just looking at it all morning. In the afternoon I took him down the beach and showed him how to sail her. But he didn't need much showing, I'm telling you. She only capsized two or three times and she's got no keel to speak of."

"You want to know what he said to me after she went over the first time?" he asked, pride in the rising inflection of his voice. "She needs weight on the bottom, daddy. What do you think of that?"

"I suggested he could take off some of her sail and what do you suppose he said to that? 'You'd spoil her, daddy, taking the sail off and she'll go better if you just weight her on the bottom.'"

"He'll take no reefs," Suttle chuckled.

"That he won't," agreed Jess, and went forward to hunt up old Tarboy and tell the story all over again.

After a while he talked so much about his boy that men at the wharf got in the habit of hailing him with, "How's the youngster, Jess?" "When you shippin' that new mate, Tiverton?" or just, "How's the new mate makin' out to home?" They poked no fun at Jess Tiverton because of his enthusiasm; they knew the man too well for that. And Jess, recognizing their interest as sincere, basked in the sunshine of their friendship and his own hopes.

When Young Jess was twelve years old he went his first trip to sea on the last voyage the Blue Belle ever made. It was July, with schooling at an end until autumn, and Jess figured the boy was old enough to make a start. He had been talking about it for weeks, making up to Suttle, who by this time knew from the captain's telling the youngster's every mood and characteristic.

With his father, Young Jess went down to the boat at T-Wharf late one afternoon when the Blue Belle was iced and had her herring aboard ready to sail when the breeze sprang up at sundown. He was a little fellow for his age with fair hair inclined to curl down over his forehead and eyes as deeply blue as his mother's. His father took him aboard and introduced him all around.

"A good hand and bound to be a real fisherman," Jess said.

"Think you're goin' to like shippin' on a smelly old fish boat?" Tripper Tarboy asked him.

"You bet I am," the little chap answered.

Before the Blue Belle sailed word got about the wharf that Jess Tiverton's prospective mate had finally arrived and a number of men from the other boats came to wish him well.

The vessel went down the harbor with the sunset, old Tripper Tarboy at the wheel and Young Jess by his side.

"You swing her over like this," Tripper was saying, "and keep her foremast leanin' onto that island there; that's Peddock's. Here, feel of her."

Not tall enough to stand over the wheel, Young Jess spread his arms and scarcely touched the spokes on either side. George Suttle happened along and stood for a while watching the fun.

"He's a-sailin' of her right enough," cackled Tripper, his wrinkled hands holding the helm steady.

"That he is," said George. "I'm thinking I'll have to be looking for a new berth shortly."

It was the Grand Banks that trip and Young Jess had experienced his spell of sickness and caught his sea legs before they passed Sable island. He had the spare bunk aft in the cabin with his father and Suttle, and what they did not attempt to teach him about a ship's handling and rigging wasn't worth knowing. He was a capable as well as a lovable chap, and the manner in which he would repeat aloud their instructions would have been laughable but for the sincerity of his efforts.

The Blue Belle's captain elected to fish the south outside shoals of the Grand Banks and met with fair success. Young Jess went as third dory mate with Tarboy and Clem Haliday and learned from those old timers how best to snub his hooks, bait and lay his trawl lines and, what is more important, pull them afterwards.

The avidity with which he seized upon every little detail of knowledge, his eagerness to learn and his ability to retain what they taught him pleased Jess in no little degree. Nor was the boy's father the only one to experience pleasure in the teaching of Young Jess; Suttle and other members of the Blue Belle's crew, particularly Tarboy, took a keen interest in his advancement.

"Think he's going to make the grade?" Jess asked Suttle one evening of a day when the fish had been coming particularly well and the outlook was excellent for an early trip home.

"I'm ready to step out after this trip," the mate replied, smiling. "He knows as much as I do now."

Heavy weather seldom bothers a good fisherman. Given a staunch ribbed vessel and the luck of the fleet, those well laid two-masters, ranging anywhere from fifty to one hundred and twenty-five tons, make a go of it in any sort of wind and sea with plenty of water beneath their keels. Ships have foundered, fishermen have come to grief when caught with shoal water on their lee side during a blow. That has been so since ever the fish market fisherman put out to sea; will remain so until the world decides to eat no more fish.

There is an element in the life of the Banks fisherman, however, more treacherous than hurricane or mountainous sea, shoal water on the sands or quick water on the ledges. It is fog.

Men who have spent nearly all their lives upon the water may speak to you lightly of wind and rough weather yet tell you they know fear when fog sets in. Heavy as a sea may be, blow a gale ever so strong, you can see what is ahead, have a

ED WYNN

Dear Mr. Wynn:—I have been trying to raise vegetables in a little garden in the back yard of my home. I am doing pretty well with everything but cabbages. I have been told that the Irish method of raising cabbages is the most successful. Can you tell me how the Irish raise cabbage? Sincerely—ARTIE CHOKE.

Answer:—With a knife and fork.

Dear Mr. Wynn:—Do you think it is really true that women make fools of men? Yours truly—IKE ANTBE LEEVIT.

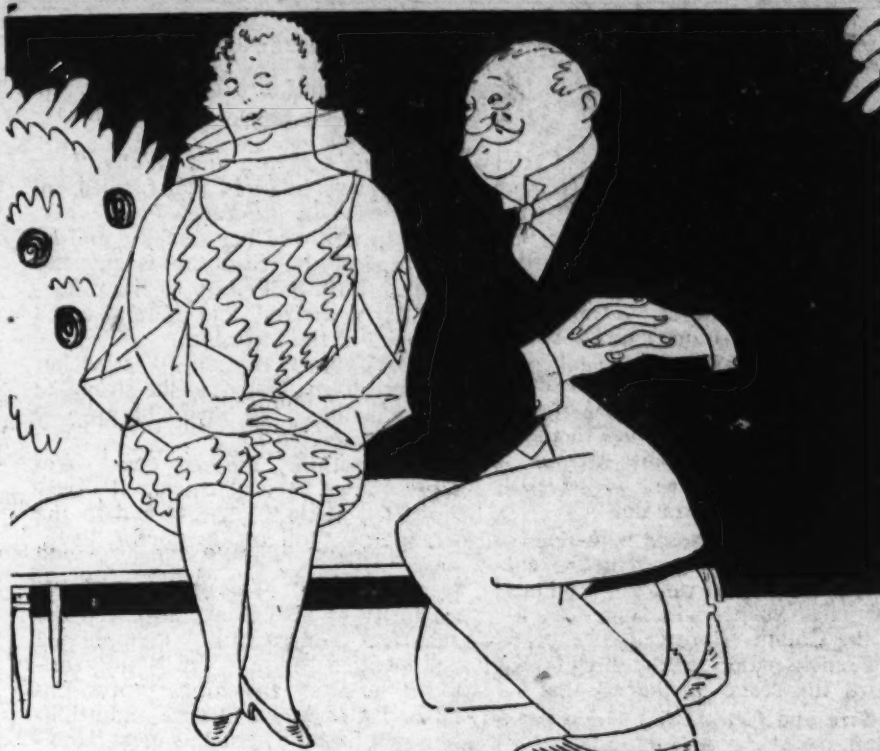

Answer:—Some times they do, but some times it isn't necessary.

Dear Mr. Wynn:—I met a fellow the other day and have since found out that he is an awful liar and is not thought very much of in our community. I am placed in a very embarrassing position. He has asked me to lend him $50.00 and when I asked him when he would pay me back, he said: "I will pay you back in two weeks, on the word of a gentleman." What shall I do? Truly yours—IONA MAC TRUCK.

Answer:—Tell him you'll lend him the money if he'll bring the gentleman around.

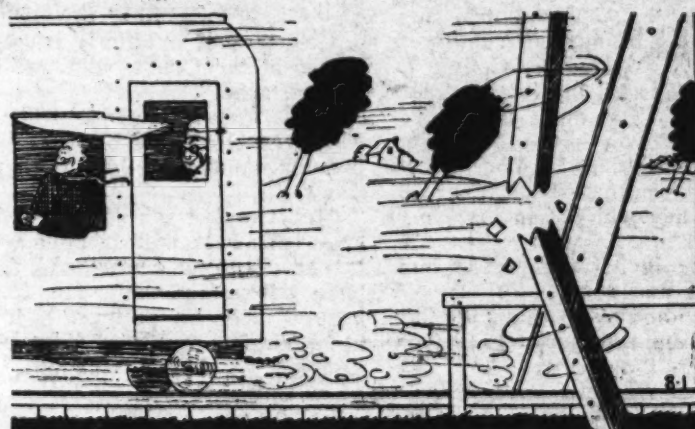

Dear Mr. Wynn:—In the past 10 days I have read, in the newspapers, of thirty-four men committing crimes. I discovered by keeping tabs on them that 23 of the 34 men ran away to Canada. How do you account for that? C. KLUSIVE.

Answer:—I am surprised, as I thought everybody knew that it was the only place "Toronto."

Dear Mr. Wynn:—I am a woman 43 years of age, and have never been married. A widower about my own age is madly in love with me and wants to marry me. I love him all right, but he says he is a member of 12 lodges. What I want to know is this: Is it wise to marry a man who belongs to as many as 12 lodges? Sincerely—MAY SONNICK.

Answer:—There is no harm in it as long as you will be satisfied with him staying away from home 12 nights a week.

Dear Mr. Wynn:—Every time I take a railroad trip I have an argument with the train conductor about sticking my head out the window. I am an American citizen and I always pay for my tickets and I object to this kind of treatment. I have a right to put my head out the train window, haven't I? Sincerely—ANN R. KIST.

Answer:—Of course you have a perfect right to put your head out the train window. The only reason the conductors say anything to you about it is that they want you to realize that in case the train passes over a bridge, and your head is sticking out and your head damages any of the ironwork on the bridge, you'll have to pay for it.

Dear Mr. Wynn:—I have often heard that the worst blow one can receive, is the kick of a mule. Do you think a mule can kick harder than a kangaroo? Yours truly—ANN TIPODES.

Answer:—I have never been kicked by a kangaroo, but once a mule succeeded in kicking me and for the following six months every time I sat down I left "foot prints."

Dear Mr. Wynn:—A friend of mine has just returned from a trip through the South American tropics and he said that some times, while walking along, he would sink 10 and 12 inches in the ground. What struck me rather peculiar was his assertion that farmers lived there and cattle grazed all around. How could cattle exist in mud like that? Yours truly—E. QUATOR.

Answer:—Your friend is right. I have been where he speaks of and I have seen the mud so deep down there that the farmers had to jack the cows up to milk them.

Dear Mr. Wynn:—Don't you think a man will succeed better in life if he goes by the following rule: "Live and Let Live?" Truly yours—HAMMOND EGGS.

Answer:—That is a great rule for every one excepting a butcher.

Dear Mr. Wynn:—I am a boy nine years old and I love green apples. My mother says if I don't stop eating them I'll get apple-plexy. Do you believe that? Yours truly—I. M. A. TREEKLIMER.

FORNEY WYLY

THE revival of Sir James M. Barrie's "What Every Woman Knows" has turned out to be the most popular revival of the year. No small amount of the success of this Maude Adams play is to the enchanting manner in which Helen Hayes takes the role of Maggie Wylie.

To date, Miss Hayes is the first actress to take a Maude Adams part and, as you Americans say, "get away with it." The kindest thing to be said about Marilyn Miller's disastrous performance of "Peter Pan" is that she is unspeakably lovely in "Sunny." Furthermore when Ruth Chatterton took it upon herself to do "The Little Minister," the result was extremely embarrassing to all concerned. But in "What Every Woman Knows," Miss Hayes gives a most glowing performance and one that ranks high with the best of recent years. I believe that Miss Hayes owes her success in the part to having played the role of Maggie Wylie rather than the role of Maude Adams playing Maggie Wylie, if you know what I mean. Some very good actresses are such very poor mimics.

Theatergoing Atlanta seems to like "The Cocoanuts" as much as they liked "Louie the 14th" last year. It seems to be the first show most of you attend after you've left your carpet bag at the hotel. Recently I saw Christine and Rankin Manley apparently having a grand time at this show, and with them were Fannie Manley McCullough and J. N. I looked very carefully to see if by chance Vallie Manley Cooper and Hunter were among the group and thus make the married Manleys at "The Cocoanuts"—one hundred per cent, but if they were there they escaped my prying eyes. "The Cocoanuts" is one of those shows I find will bear repeated visits very nicely.

As a matter of fact, with the number of new shows as small as Olga Petrova's waist, I find that several of the past year's productions can be visited the second time with very little pain. If you chance to take a stroll down West Forty-fifth street, for instance, there happen to be enough shows on that street alone to shut you up for some time. First there's "What Every Woman Knows" at the Bijou. Then right next door resides "Craig's Wife" which despite the fact it won the Pulitzer prize is still a good play. Sandwiched in between "Craig's Wife" and "Cradle Snatchers" at the Music Box, is "The Merry World," a good enough revue for anybody. And I found "Cradle Snatchers" on the third trip just as convulsively funny as it was on the first.

In fact, if the police department were not so unreasonable about letting you sleep in the street, you might pack a nice lunch and spend several days on that one Forty-fifth street block without running out of something to do. The braver of you who'd even risk crossing the street would find "Iolanthe," the best Gilbert and Sullivan opera ever revived, patiently across the street at the Plymouth.

Then, if night clubs bore you, and yet you don't want to go to bed, you might try the Cascades on the 22d floor of the Biltmore. It's tremendously cool there, the music is good, and you're not annoyed with entertainers if you're the type whom entertainers annoy. "The Cascades" furthermore happens to be one of those places where it's rather nice to be caught at.

Supporters of the "So's Your Old Man" school of conversation have run up against a new remark which is delighting them more than anything in years. Whenever you care to appear rather snappy, I learn the smartest thing you can say is "One swallow does not make a summer," in just about the jauntiest way you know how.

Such a remark should obviously attain nation-wide popularity. It is meaningless enough and silly enough to suit almost anybody. And I am inclined to believe that just about all has been gotten out of "So's Your Young Old Man" that possibly could be.

It is to be hoped that those inmates of your city who generally lend their earnest and untiring efforts toward popularizing such current classics will take a fancy to this newest one. New Yorkers are each and every one doing their bit toward filling all causes with "Well, after all, you know, one swallow does not make a summer."

This is perhaps as painless a way as any of going beautifully mad.

A Fascinating New Serial By John T. McCutcheon

INSTALLMENT XXVII Complications.

FROM the veranda Mrs. Crayton watched Virginia and the Count depart on the little sightseeing trip up the neighboring hills, guided by the inexcusably good-looking chauffeur. She noted with satisfaction that her daughter was particularly nice to the Count, and as long as they were in sight her beaming eyes never left them.

She was glad she had declined to join them. The surroundings were beautiful and the setting a favorable one for romance; the pleasant opportunities for physical contacts which climbing rugged paths afford the gentleman would not, she was sure, be neglected by the gallant Count.

So she found a comfortable chair and gave herself over to day dreams of the future, when she would be a welcome visitor to the chateau of the Count and Countess de Barsac.

An hour passed and then another. Instead of becoming anxious, she construed the prolonged absence to be an excellent augury of romantic events now transpiring some place up on those lovely heights. She closed her eyes in gentle speculation.

When she reopened them and glanced down the pathway leading to the hills she sat up in sudden alarm. The Count was coming—alone. He was walking very fast and was carrying his hat. With the other gloved hand he frequently mopped his brow. Something must have happened!

She ran down the steps to meet him.

"Your daughter," panted the Count, "has sprained her ankle."

"Mercy!" she cried, much agitated, "but you haven't left her alone up there?"

"No, madam, the chauffeur is bringing her down slowly. I thought it best to hurry ahead and see that a doctor is on hand when she arrives."

"How thoughtful," she murmured, vaguely disappointed. Subconsciously she had an uncomfortable feeling that her dream castles were again threatened with collapse.

They hurried into the inn, and after a short delay were assured that a doctor was on the way and would soon arrive. In a quarter of an hour that seemed much longer, a sedan dashed up to the door with a grinding of brakes and the doctor, a pompous little man, came running up the steps. He at once demanded to be taken to the patient.

"The patient has not yet arrived," said Mrs. Crayton, "but she will be here presently. The chauffeur is bringing her in—she has sprained her ankle."

As the minutes passed with no sign of the patient, it occurred to the doctor that it would be well to go out and meet her. So he, with Mrs. Crayton and the Count, reinforced by Celeste, the French maid, started briskly out toward the scene of the mishap.

Pierre and Celeste fell a few paces behind.

"O, Pierre," deplored the maid in a tense whisper, "What has become of your cleverness? How could you have left her when you had such an opportunity to be heroic?" She raised her eyes in desperation. "And to leave her with that chauffeur—the most attractive man I've met in this stupid country! Ah, mon dieu, my friend, you are losing your cunning."

"Shut up!" growled the Count.

"Ah, ha, you tell me to shut up!" she flamed. "You don't like to be reminded that you have acted with monumental stupidity! You throw this girl into his arms—what can you expect? They will fall in love, my friend, mark my words!"

Something in her tone made him glance quickly at her.

"I believe you're in love with this handsome empty-headed chauffeur yourself."

"Idiot!" she snapped, and with an ominous tightening of her lips and a dangerous glint in her black eyes, she redoubled her pace and left him lagging behind.

Virginia Crayton and Wells were found a few hundred feet farther on. Wells was on his knees before her. She had removed her stocking and he was tenderly but firmly massaging her ankle. Both looked up as the relieving party arrived and both seemed annoyed at the intrusion.

"O, Virginia, my child!" cried her mother, dramatically, as she struggled up the incline. "O, my child, are you suffering terribly?"

"It's nothing, mother, dear. I'm sorry you've been alarmed. It's only a twisted ankle." She turned to the stranger. "You are the doctor, I suppose."

"Yes, miss." The doctor, with the authority of his calling, displaced the chauffeur and skillfully manipulated her swollen ankle. "It is not serious," he said, frowning professionally. "A few days of care and attention will find it as good as new. However, we must now get you down to the inn and dress it properly. I'm sorry you have been obliged to walk on it."

"But I haven't walked on it," replied Virginia, with a sudden suffusion of color. "He has carried me," and there was no mistaking the softness of the glance she gave the chauffeur.

Celeste shot a bitterly triumphant glance at the Count, who was biting his mustache.

Wells now spoke up. "The path was very steep and rough," he explained, "and so we had to go pretty slow."

Mrs. Crayton sniffed. "You should have been back half an hour ago."

The chauffeur's answer to this rebuke was a faint smile not at all in keeping with his position. He then lifted Virginia gently in his arms and resumed his way to the inn. Mrs.

Crayton glanced helplessly at the Count, whose narrowed eyes evaded hers. He also evaded Celeste's glare of withering fury. The sight of another woman in the arms of the chauffeur was maddening to the French maid, who, in spite of her cold blooded sophistication, had been so stirred by this attractive youth.

If she was quick to fall in love she was equally quick to hate and her hatred was now turned toward her accessory in this fortune hunting plot.

It was a brooding group that followed Virginia and the chauffeur. There were no more delays and the party soon arrived at the inn.

"Will it be safe to resume our trip?" Mrs. Crayton asked the doctor.

"O, certainly, after a day or two," he answered, "but unless there are urgent reasons for haste, I would advise remaining here at least until tomorrow or the next day."

She sighed resignedly. There were no reasons for haste.

One thing was evident. Virginia Crayton was in love with the handsome Wells, or, if not in love, something very near it. To be clasped in the arms of an extremely good-looking young man, one whose good looks were supplemented by humor, education, and physical strength, and to be tenderly carried in this way for an hour or more with occasional stops during which he gently massaged her bare ankle, was likely to stir emotions in even a less impressionable girl than Virginia.

And Wells had not escaped heart whole. While the doctor was bandaging her ankle, he sat in a secluded spot some distance from the inn, his head in his hands. "What a ghastly complication," he thought. Here he was, committed by all that was loyal, to protect the interests of his friend Harry Rasher, whom he assumed to be deeply in love with Virginia. And definite knowledge of what to expect and prepare for. Not so in a fog.

Fog shut down on the south shoals of the Grand Banks on the 17th of July when the Blue Belle was fair loaded for a run home the next day. There may be spots on the Atlantic where fog sets in more quickly and with greater density than upon the Grand Banks of Newfoundland. But they have yet to be located.

Jess Tiverton had smelled fog coming; no boat of his vessel was over the side when it arrived.

"We'll call it a trip, I guess," he told George Suttle. "When it lifts we'll get along for home."

The Blue Belle rode at anchor that night in thirty-six fathoms with a calm sea and a fog as thick as a horse blanket. From the deck the mast-head lights were barely visible. There was a double watch and the fog horn was sounded every sixty seconds. Below deck forward men played cards or reclined in their bunks, smoking and talking of the prospects for a fair voyage home.

At exactly eleven o'clock Fairley Manser, who had been Jess Tiverton's cook for years, was serving a round of coffee and pie in the forecabin to men who laughed when old Tripper Tarboy spilled his cupful of steaming liquid down his pant leg and into his boot, and jocularly intimated that Tripper was becoming too old to "handle his vittals."

Fifteen minutes later the Blue Belle or what remained of her, rested on gray sand at the bottom of those 36 fathoms of water. Eleven of her crew were with her. Tragedy that night for many homes. Greater tragedy for Jess Tiverton. For Young

Jess drowned on his first trip to sea.

Out of the darkness and the fog, off her course and speeding between fourteen and sixteen knots against all maritime regulations governing the movements of steamers in a fog, came the Triumph, pride of the Barthlemess line, New York, bound from Cherbourg and overdue.

The watch of the Blue Belle saw her lights only when the thirty-two thousand ton express loomed immediately above them. Time only to shout an unheard warning. Time only to sound the fog horn in one quick, anguished wail. The steel bow of the liner split the fishing schooner from starboard bow to port 'midships, snapping her foremast like a stick of brittle coral. Men were crushed to death and men were drowned by the flooding sea even before the Blue Belle sank. She went down almost immediately, however, while the Triumph, only jarred by the impact, slowed down, reversed her engines, and came finally to a dead stop an eighth of a mile away.

No need to describe the horror attending that scene nor the manner of young Jess' death. Let it suffice that none could have saved him.

The liner, her havoc wrought, steamed splendidly up, brought her battery of searchlights to play on the wreckage and lowered her port side lifeboats. They picked up the survivors, recovered what bodies it was possible to recover. Two hours later the Triumph was again steaming towards New York, speed undiminished, and her wireless was flashing the first cryptic message of the disaster to a world where fishermen count but little in the day's news.

It would have been melodramatic had Jess Tiverton fought against his rescuers. He did not do so; there was in his nature no melodrama of the sort. Nor would he take advantage of the Triumph's offer to send his own version of the tragedy through the air.

"I've nothing to tell," he told the Triumph's master. And he had nothing to tell, for until they landed in New York he spoke no other word.

"Jess Tiverton will never sail again," they said along the waterfront. In Boston, Gloucester, and Nantucket men who knew his story shook their heads.

"The sea has beaten him," was their verdict in so many words.

"All his heart and all his soul, if a man has a soul, were given to that youngster," George Suttle told old Tarboy. "A man can only fight so long," he added significantly.

Josiah Mulvaney and James Tempor, the Blue Belle's owners, sent for Jess to come to Salem.

"There's talk you'll never take out another boat," Mulvaney put it straight up to him.

"I have no boat to fake out," Jess answered simply.

"Which means, I take it, that you'll sail again providing you get the boat?"

"Why not?" Answer enough there.

"We're going to build a new boat. You're the man to have her if you want to," Tempor said. Then they asked him for specifications and whether he had any ideas of his own he might wish to incorporate in the new vessel.

"Have her built from the Blue Belle's prints," said Jess. "There's no better boat afloat than she was."

And Mulvaney, who was an understanding sort of man despite an exterior as sharply cold as cracked ice, advised: "Go down and help them build her. And name her what you wish."

But after he had gone, Tempor remarked: "Jess Tiverton is getting old. He will not sail any boat for long."

"He is past sixty," Mulvaney said. "Too old a man to hold up against his loss."

Jess Tiverton was getting old; sorrow laid gaunt hands upon his shoulders and weighed them down. But he went down to Sib Benton's shipyard at Gloucester and superintended the building of the new craft he was to sail. They laid her keel line while he looked on and he was there when they bent her ribs in place.

"I want the best job you've done," he told Benton, a strange catch in his voice. "I won't be sailing of her long and I want the finest fishing boat in the fleet for the one who takes her over."

He never left the shipyard till she slid down the ways one raw March day when it seemed that spring must never come.

George Suttle was there at the launching. And Tripper Tarboy. They were near enough to Jess to hear him say: "I christen you Ruth McKelvie. Good luck and a bundle of fish and God be with you."

So they painted "Ruth McKelvie" along her bows and across her stern in fine gold letters. Then they stepped a mainmast into her and later a fore-

Spiritual Adviser to 18,000 Leathernecks

HE marines have landed and have the situation well in hand," and "With the help of God and a few marines" were axioms long before America entered the war. At Tripoli, Guantanamo, Cavite, Manila, Pekin, Haiti, Vera Cruz, and other places where swift and sure military action was needed to protect our country's interests, a few marines, with the help of God, landed and took the situation so well in hand that the above sayings became household expressions. And God wasn't given so much credit at that.

But during the war the marines obtained a liaison officer between themselves and God, for it was then that John H. "Doc" Clifford came to the corps.

Before the war the marines had a reputation for toughness as well as courage. They were fighting men and were proud of the names they were called, "Leathernecks" and "Devil Dogs." And since the war, what with "What Price Glory?" and other matters, neither reputation has declined. In brief, the average reader does not regard a marine as promising timber for prayer meetings.

Hence it may surprise the average reader, unless he is one of the thousands who already know the story of "Old Doc of the Fifth," to learn that there is one man in the United States, a civilian, who can enter any marine post in the world and be implored by these leathernecks, these devil dogs, to talk to them about the old-time religion. Moreover, he is the only man in the United States of whom this can be said.

Ten years ago "Doc" Clifford had never seen a marine and was a pastor of an obscure church in Tucson, Arizona. In 1917 he went to France as a Y. M. C. A. worker, and was assigned to the Fifth marines of the second division.

A Story of the Man Who "Belongs to God and The Marines" Told by Marine Stationed in Atlanta

His welcome with the marines was exactly what might have been expected. Neither officers nor men wanted him. If he had anything to say, he could "Tell it to the army and navy." The marines might accept God's help, but nobody short of that. To be quite frank and accurate about it, the first marine the Doc approached, a first sergeant, told him to go to Hell.

But that was before they knew Doc. Five weeks later the same first sergeant installed an upright soap box in the mess hall, scoured the brigade for a Bible—it had one—and asked the Doc to hold a service. He did. After that, from December, 1917, to the armistice, he never missed a Sunday and the "Top" never missed a service.

After the war, the Y. M. C. A. decided to transfer "Doc" Clifford to some other field; but the marines, from General Lejeune to the lowliest private, flooded the association officials with letters saying, "Don't take 'Doc' Clifford away from us." Doc stayed, and today he is the only "sky pilot" the marine corps has, as its chaplains, like its medical force, are the navy's. The Doc, in the exclusive post created for him as honorary chaplain to the marine corps, is the sole official spiritual adviser of 18,000 leathernecks scattered all over the world.

You can imagine how busy the Doc keeps. One week he is at the naval prison at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, holding meetings which two hundred out of the three hundred men voluntarily attend. The next he is aboard a battleship off Newport News, where sailors as well as marines crowd the decks to hear him. Then he is off to Cuba, Haiti, St. Thomas, Panama, Pensacola, Charleston, Parris Island, Washington, Philadelphia, New York and Boston. And his long trail is never over; it keeps winding back again. Next year he is going to Guam, the Philippines and China.

And what, you probably want to know, is the sort of a fellow who can turn a hard-bolled top sergeant into a promoter of revival meetings? What is his charm? What is his secret of success?

A little story published in the marine magazine, the Leatherneck, gives an answer to these questions.

Said a Catholic marine to a Jewish marine:

"Say, what church does Doc Clifford belong to?"

"Church?" replied the Jewish marine. "Church! He don't belong to no church! He belongs to God and the marines."

Glimpses of Hollywood

—By—
ROSALIND SHAFFER

URSTING bombs, sky scaling rockets and the tick-tick of machine guns made the sky in Fox hills lurid for the night scenes being enacted of "What Price Glory."

Acres of hill and dale, covered with the ruins of buildings, uprooted trunks of orchard trees and half demolished country garden walls made a realistic setting for hundreds of war veterans clad in the khaki of war times who were doing charges and counter-charges amid a deafening roar of shells. Real hazards of flying dirt and timbers were encountered by non-combatant observers and the banks of pungent smoke rolling over the scene smarted the eyes of spectators accustomed to the glare of klieg.

A large number of Hollywood folk turned out to see the scenes shot as "What Price Glory's" war mimicry is most pretentious in extent and elaboration. Branch-lined trenches with sand bag mounds above them wound over a considerable area and let it be stated right here that the boys in those trenches needed something like the actual protection the sand bags afforded. No man's land was gutted with shell holes, some of which were occupied by clusters of soldiers manipulating machine guns with continual spits of sound and flame.

Among the spectators noted were Sojin, the Chinese actor and several of his friends; Miriam Cooper, wife of Raoul Walsh, the director and formerly an actress herself with Griffith.

Realism had been carried out to such an extent that there was no comfortable smooth surface on the ground for visitors to sit on. One interested old gentleman in Sojin's party carefully spread his handkerchief to sit down on, but by the time he was seated he was not on the handkerchief at all.

The weinie and hamburger wagons that always hover on the edge of a night location were doing a thriving business, not a little of it being with Edmund Lowe and Victor McLaglen, the sergeant quirt and Captain Flagg of the picture.

The boys are having a great time speaking the tough titles required by the story so that the lady visitors don't hear them.

The social event of the week was the garden party of Agnes Christine Johnson, the scenarist, at her home in Santa Monica on Sunday evening. One hundred and fifty guests sat down to supper at long tables arranged in the garden under the spreading branches of a huge pepper tree hung with lighted Chinese lanterns.

Vivid red cannas in a large bed at the base of the pepper tree lent a colorful note to the festivities, carried out around the tables illuminated by huge candelabra holding red candles. Great Chinese vases were filled with flowers.

The favors, bright colored miniature parrots on a perch proved irresistible to John Gilbert, who promptly adopted a red and yellow one for a boutonniere. Beatrice Lillie, the English actress, starred in Charlot's Revue, was seated between Gilbert and Maro Connelly, here from New York to write a story for Miss Lillie which will be produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Miss Lillie wore a king's blue crepe gown sleeveless and with a deep V decollete and a long double string of large pearls. Gilbert and Connelly kept calling Miss Lillie "our English cousin" and arguing over the appropriateness of "Little Goodie Square Shoes" as the title for the new story.

Eleanor Boardman was among the first to succumb to the lure of the Hawaiian musicians who were playing in the house and looked quaint in her long dance frock of pink made simply; and her small pink hat with straight brim was ornamented with a band of raspberry velvet ending in a tailored bow at one side. Green velvet slippers went with her costume. Her straight blond hair was dressed away from the face in a small knot on the back of the neck.

Mrs. Charles Ray appeared with her golden hair in the wispy bob style now popular, beautifully dressed in a heavy white moire robe de style, so full and stiff it could d'stand alone" as the boast was in the days of our grandmothers. Claire Windsor chose to be more informal and appeared in a white silk ensemble suit with a pale pink felt hat, head fitting, and slightly

Pursued By Grim Ghost

Mystery of Menace of Kidnaping or Worse That Hangs Over England's Ten-Year-Old Marquis of Townshend

LONDON. AS A result of threatening letters received by the talented and beautiful Marchioness of Townshend, her little son, the ten-year-old Marquis of Townshend, is probably the most carefully guarded child in the world.

Awake or asleep, in school or at play, he is continually watched over by a score of detectives engaged by his anxious mother. At the same time, Scotland Yard is doing its best to run down the author of the anonymous letters and to find out the motive for sending them.

Why should the boy marquis be menaced with kidnaping or some still worse fate? All titled society is wondering and many suspect that the young nobleman is being pursued by some grim ghost of his mother's past. Certainly hers is a past eventful and mysterious enough to have produced at least a ghost or two.

Before her marriage the marchioness was Gwendoline Southerst, the daughter of a lawyer who had a reputation for engineering some very dubious schemes. He was finally disbarred for the way he brought about his daughter's marriage, and it has always been suspected that this was not the only one of his plots in which Gwendoline assisted.

The history of the Townshends as one of Great Britain's leading families dates back to the reign of Edward IV, and in the course of time they acquired great wealth. But unfortunately the noble father of John, the young man who later married Gwendoline Southerst, became involved in serious financial difficulties.

When he died he left his son a crippling burden of debt as well as a title, a seat in the House of Lords and historic mansions that cost a lot to maintain. To make matters worse the son was not mentally strong—actually feeble-minded, many thought.

In order to finish his education young John entered the household of a clergyman named G. A. Robbins. He became so fond of Robbins that later on, when he came into his title, he refused to leave him. He preferred to continue living in the modest home at Brighton with Robbins, his wife and a Miss Ridssdale, the latter a young woman whose name was linked by the gossips with the clergyman's in a scandalous way.

It was later charged in court that Robbins was the young marquis' evil genius. The boy hero worshiped him, but it was alleged that the clergyman's kindness was only a pretense and that he was really John's treacherous self-seeking enemy.

In 1904 a breach of promise suit was brought against the young marquis by an American woman, Mrs. Evelyn Sheffield. It was later discovered that the two had met through the introduction of Robbins, who had known Mrs. Sheffield for some time.

The suspicion that the clergyman and Mrs. Sheffield had plotted to entangle the immature and impressionable nobleman in a love affair and then divide the spoils was strengthened by her last minute refusal to enter the witness box and face cross examination.

As a result of her refusal to testify the suit was thrown out of court.

But this was only a preliminary to the real melodrama which began with a letter written by the marquis to a Mr. Dunne, clerk in a government office, and reading as follows:

"In consideration of your introducing me to Miss Gwendoline Southerst and on condition that such introduction is the means of marrying Miss Lady Fawcett, a friend of the Townshend family, suggested to Dunne that there was money in it for both of them if he could find an heiress. Alas for the reputation of the aristocracy, Lady Fawcett was not above taking a commission!

Dunne knew the Southersts slightly and had been impressed by their apparent opulence. The marquis and Mr. Robbins were invited to meet Gwen and her parents. Robbins approved of the girl, who was a beautiful creature with a halo of golden hair and a face gentle as a saint's, and so the marquis proposed and was accepted.

Robbins and Southerst got their heads together, the clergyman believing the future father-in-law of the marquis well able to keep any financial obligation he undertook. Robbins' first move, according to the prosecuting counsel, nevertheless was to secure for himself—an easy matter considering the almost abnormal influence he exerted over Townshend—a promise of some $60,000 if he didn't marry and about $30,000 if he did. And this simply led to settle upon the young couple $35,000 and to allow them $10,000 a year as well.

In consideration of this, the marquis also made settlements on his future bride. And then, according to the evidence in the case, a very remarkable thing occurred. The settlement made by the marquis upon Southerst, I promise to pay you 10 per cent of any money I receive from Mr. Southerst or any member of his family."

As was later revealed, Dunne, the money grabbing marriage broker, was a friend of Mr. Robbins. Indeed, at a still later period, the marquis threatened to commit suicide because he believed Dunne had supplanted him in the clergyman's affections.

Dunne was fooled by the plausible Mr. Southerst into thinking that the latter was a very wealthy man and that to promote the marriage of his daughter with the marquis meant a handsome commission.

Meanwhile, Robbins had been educating his trusting charge to the idea that he must "marry money" and nothing but the influx of wealth, it seemed then, could save the estates already mortgaged up to the hilt. A certain as a proof of gratitude for the "care" Robbins had bestowed on the young aristocrat!

Next, Southerst and Robbins made themselves co-trustees of the young nobleman's estates and finances and Robbins engaged himself, in addition, as private secretary at a high salary.

Meanwhile Mr. Southerst had prom-

Gwendoline was duly witnessed and signed. But the document relating to Mr. Southerst's promised settlement overlooked.

On August 9, the wedding took place, although the Townshend family and the marquis' lawyer knew nothing of the matter.

Apparently Robbins had met more than his match in Southerst. The lawyer had fooled him into believing that the marquis would get the promised money, which Robbins, according to the agreement, was to "handle." When the balked clergyman realized that only an infinitesimal part of the money had been paid and that the rest was not forthcoming he promptly cabled the marquis, then honeymooning in Brussels, to come home.

Townshend was only too delighted to return. Even his temporary separation from his hero had caused him real anguish.

The marquis and the new marchioness took a house in Brook street where, to the great discomfort of the young husband, the Southersts lived with them. The mother-in-law boxed his ears when he displeased her. Never very strong either of body or mind, his health soon suffered so severely that it was agreed he should spend three or four days a week with Mr. Robbins. Robbins decided that he must manage to keep the boy with him or the money would never be paid. To alienate the husband from the wife was his strong card. If he succeeded, Southerst could probably be forced to give up his interest in the marquis' estates that must some day become very valuable. If on the other hand, Southerst dominated the hapless nobleman, Robbins would lose. At least, so he seems to have figured out, for he persuaded the duped marquis that his true happiness lay in the clergyman's household rather than his own. He consequently returned to the house of his old adviser after a bare six months of married life.

Of course, the marchioness was indignant to have her husband escape her like this and used all sorts of wiles and cajoleries to get him back. Eventually, she did induce there. He was also told that his mother had turned against him and was trying to poison him.

The next move in the game with this human pawn was to send for a Dr. Bramwell. Having heard from the apparently anxious wife and the South-enlarged upon for their benefit. Asked in their presence what he would do if it were proved to him that Robbins had abused his trust and was robbing him, the unhappy marquis replied:

"I should stand beside him in the dock, share his prison cell with him the scheming Southerst that it was with his knowledge that the young man had been taken to France. The original plot, it was hinted, had been to terrify the nobleman into leaving the country, so that the lawyer might obtain absolute control of his fortune. This the official solicitor had prevented and so the only thing for it was a complete change of front. Having tried with their best to prove the marquis mad, his wife and father-in-law now began doing all in their power to prove him sane.

During the inquiry into the state of mind of the Marquis of Townshend, before Justice Bucknill and a jury, the unfortunate man was persuaded to return to England. Beautiful Gwendoline, still in her early twenties and a sweet and gentle type of British womanhood, was compelled to appear in court.

She testified that she had never believed the marquis mad, although she had tried to brand him as a lunatic. This she had done, she explained, "to get him away from Robbins' influence!"

When the court had listened for weeks to the sensational plots and counter plots involving the highest personages in England (the marquis' mother was sister-in-law to the present king's sister, who married the Duke of Fife) and feeling was tense all over Great Britain, the case came to an end with the verdict that the marquis, although not capable of looking after his financial interests, was sane.

To everybody's amazement the marchioness devoted herself heart and soul to her marquis' welfare from the day the court made him a free man until he died in 1921.

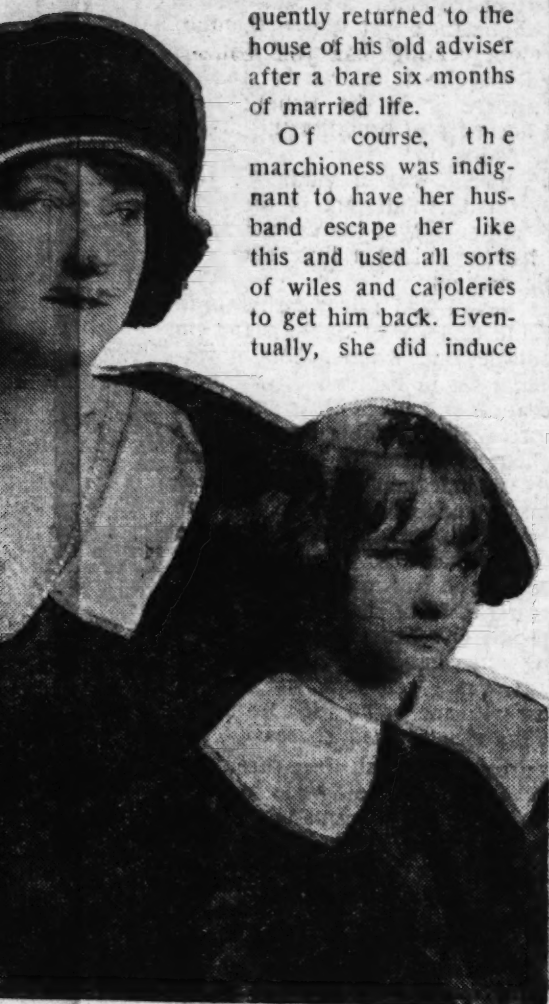

The present ten-year-old marquis inherited his title and estates at the age of five, also considerable wealth, due to capable management of the family properties. He is a typical little aristocrat, a sportsman and even at this early age a clever boxer. He has given frequent exhibitions at the National Sporting club, his mother invariably occupying a ring-side seat.

This sturdy, handsome, blue-eyed boy is his mother's greatest joy and pride and she has been driven almost frantic with anxiety over the threats against him. In addition to the score of detectives whom she employs at great expense to guard him she herself is almost constantly by his side.

A curious thing about the mystery is that the author of the threatening and him to come to London on the plea that he ought to accompany her to a fashionable reception just to show society that they were still on good terms.

After the reception, although he was anxious to get back to Brighton to keep an appointment with Robbins, he consented to go with his wife to their Mayfair home for just a few minutes. She pleaded that she wanted to speak with him privately and that she would not detain him long enough to cause him to miss his train.

The instant the marquis set foot across the threshold the trap was sprung. He heard the doors double locked and barred behind him and knew that he was a prisoner. He was introduced to a "mental nurse" who, as he immediately understood, was to be his jailer, and is said to have been told that unless he would agree to give up his beloved Robbins he would never be set free.

Under these conditions, a helpless prisoner and unable to communicate his plight to Robbins or any of his friends in the world outside, the marquis, never very strong mentally, underwent an almost complete collapse. What unnerved him particularly were the threats to have him put in an insane asylum and the stories told him of the cruel treatment he would receive erst of the marquis' behavior and seeing the patient in a highly excited state; sent for an alienist, Dr. Savage.

Madness, of course, is a relative condition. If a millionaire took to selling papers on the streets for a living, we should know he was mad. If a poor boy did the very same thing we should consider it very good evidence of his sanity. In the same way excitement in certain circumstances is insane and in others normal.

The circumstance of the marquis' detention was carefully hidden from the medical men. They had no idea of the frightful emotional strain which had caused his hysterical state. The "hypnotic influence" of Robbins was and when he was liberated, give him entire control of my affairs!"

This extravagant declaration of faith impelled the doctors to fall in with the suggestion of Mr. Southerst that the marquis should be pronounced insane.

Accompanied by the marchioness, her father made the application. But at the request of the official solicitor, he was forced to let the latter petition in his place. This interference seems to have upset the plans of the wife and father-in-law. In consequence, shortly after the application had been presented, Mr. Southerst visited the official solicitor and explained that the marquis had escaped.

During the trial, it was admitted by most and bent on her bleached new canvas sails.

A white, eager gull she went down to Georges early in May on her maiden trip, as pretty and able a fishing schooner as ever left the Highland Light to stern. George Suttle was her mate. Tripper Tarboy squatted at her windward rain and painted white numbers on the trail tubs. Two or three others who had been with Jess Tiverton on the Blue Belle were also along; the remainder long since had shipped on other vessels, for a fisherman cannot allow sentiment to interfere with the appetite of his family.

They had ten days of fair fishing and iced upwards of one hundred thousand pounds before bad weather struck in. Then it blew three days steadily out of the northeast and the sun failed to break through the low lying, driving clouds. On the afternoon of the third day it fell a flat calm for an hour and a new breeze followed, out of the southeast.

Jess had been below the greater part of the afternoon, but he came off deck before the wind shifted. Mark what he said to Suttle.

"We been talking it over down below and we think it's going to come a blow. Let's get for home."

"Talking it over," Suttle began. "Who you been . . ." He stopped suddenly. Something in Jess Tiverton's eyes held his tongue.

The mate went forward and passed the word. Not until they were laying off for Boston did he seek old Tripper out.

"He said they'd been talking it over and had decided it was going to blow. What do you think of that, now? Who'd he been talking it over with?"

No man to intrude, Tripper; the years had taught him discretion.

"It's none o' my business and little o' yours," he answered. "You let Jess be. He's missin' that boy some."

"You should have seen his eyes when he told me to get sail up," Suttle protested. "It was like I wasn't there."

"Maybe you wasn't. Maybe you wasn't there. For him, any way. We'll do as we're told and leave Jess be."

An hour later it became apparent that he from whom Jess Tiverton took advice had displayed good sense. It blew a screaming late May gale out of the southeast all night, but the storm found the Ruth McKelvie in deep water. A Gloucester ship went on the shoals that night and four men were drowned; a Gay Head fourteen tonner lost her single mast and helmsman; other vessels came to grief in lesser degree.

The Ruth made heavy weather but her reefs were in and her dories stowed and she ran off that blow like geese flying down wind from the futile guns. Jess Tiverton sailed her himself; he held her wheel in water sometimes to his waist.

"Sail her, sonny, sail her!" he cried above the noise of wind and sea.

Once he turned his head to where Suttle stood just at his elbow. "Tell George," he shouted, just as if George wasn't there—"Tell George he better spike in his jib or the sea'll carry it out. What do you think?"

George Suttle knew better than to answer. That question was not meant for him. It was Old Jess at the wheel. Young Jess by his side.

That voyage marked the beginning of as queer a story as ever was repeated in the North Atlantic fishing fleet, the story of Jess Tiverton and his mate, Young Jess, who had drowned on his first trip to sea. George Suttle continued to sail aboard the Ruth McKelvie, mate in name only, because there had grown in his heart over a long period of years a great and sure love for this captain whom sorrow had claimed. He continued to occupy the cabin with Jess, although he knew that for the Ruth's master another slept there also.

Never following that maiden voyage of the Ruth McKelvie did Jess Tiverton address an order directly to Suttle. He spoke always to an unseen third person.

"Wind's laying off and we got ballast. Don't you think you better get George to shake a reef? Carry it, can't we?"

And George Suttle would wait a reasonable length of time and pass the order along.

It came, as it was sure to come where such a situation existed—misgiving in place of trust, doubt dispelling confidence, incredulity displacing stoicism. Aboard his own ship they began talking about Jess Tiverton. Young fellows who had no understanding of the cross he was bearing.

"Me? I think the old fellow's nutty, if you ask me. Mumblin' all the time to himself and never speakin' outright to his mate. What's he got a mate for, any way?"

And: "Believe me, I wouldn't stand for it if I was in Suttle's boots. No sir, not me."

They went on thus, but when wrinkled Tripper Tarboy was around they kept their mouths closed.

"Put a lock on your tongue, young feller, or I'll sure hand you one," he'd threaten them. And they would, too, for the old man's fists had lost none of their weight and speed.

But though old Tripper's threats served the purpose when he was about, they could not hope to put an end to the talk altogether, and the story was not slow in traveling. Crews visit while ashore; the word was spoken among other boats. Men of the fleet who had known Jess since long before the Blue Belle met her fate expressed sympathy for the man. There were others who saw in the situation an opportunity for unkind, sacrilegious jest.

One day at the wharf Jess was hailed by Torrey Lamberts, a New Bedford motor swordfisherman.

Lamberts called: "I hear you got two mates aboard that vessel of yours, Tiverton. How's to lend me one? I need a good man."

There was no reply forthcoming from the Ruth's master. But he went chalk-white and his fingers clenched. A month later Jess Tiverton took his new boat on the Nantucket shoals in the dead of a pitch black night and a gale of wind that blew her jib out, and rescued a half dozen of the crew of Torrey Lambert's ship, which had gone ashore with a stalled engine in the storm. Lamberts himself was drowned.

But it was the manner of the Ruth's going to the rescue rather than the rescue itself which afforded a topic of conversation. Jess Tiverton's vessel was caught with others in shoal water when the storm broke without 15 minutes' warning. She had, however, ample opportunity to get rigged and into deeper soundings and was well into twenty-five fathoms when Tiverton came to Suttle, who was at the helm.

"He says he sees flares," Jess called above the storm. "They'll be in a couple miles off your starboard on the shoals. We better run in, he says."

So they ran her in while those of the crew who were skeptical of their captain's mentality cursed him for a fool. Even George Suttle's faith was strained that night. No lights showed; there was no sign of any vessel in distress, but Jess gripped Suttle by the arm.

"It's Torrey Lamberts and his Sleepwalker, you say! Well, we'll get them just the same, sonny."

The lead showed six fathoms of water when they made out her single masthead light. She was hard on, with the seas breaking over her, but Jess took the wheel away from his mate and brought his own vessel in as close as he dared. Then he floated two dories, on lines, down wind to the beached swordfisherman. One of them was swamped. The other brought back six of the Sleepwalker's crew.

When the Ruth was safe in deep water again, George Suttle turned to one of the rescued men and asked: "How long had you been burning flares?"

"We didn't burn no flares," came the answer. "We didn't have none."

None asked Jess Tiverton how he knew there was a vessel in distress. No man inquired from Jess Tiverton from whom he learned it was Torrey Lamberts' boat there on the sands. Tripper Tarboy shook his head when Suttle told him the facts.

"It's as I told you. I've heard o' such things before. The boy is with him all the time."

There were others who thought the same after that rescue, but who refused to accept the belief with Tripper's complaisance. The Ruth lost eight men of her crew when the voyage ended.

"He's a madman," one of them said as explanation. "He risks your life and his own on some mad twist of his brain and because he happens to be lucky once is no reason you won't go to Davy Jones the next time."

Harbingers of bad times, those words. For the Ruth began to experience difficulty signing crews. One trip men are neither satisfactory nor satisfied fishermen. All men of the sea are superstitious and fishermen are no exception; not many could bear the thought of their lives entrusted to the wisdom of a mate they had never seen.

"It's a hell ship he'll make of her," some said. "Another Night Hawk."

The Ruth's trips became of increasing duration; her hauls smaller. The boat was hardly paying; not paying well enough to keep a steady crew under normal conditions. Such a situation is not allowed to exist for long without some word from those chiefly interested financially.

Tempor was in Boston at the conclusion of one of the Ruth's unprofitable trips and with Jess Tiverton held a conference in the cabin while the ship was being unloaded. It lasted upward of an hour and when it ended Tempor left the ship alone.

George Suttle, going below, paused outside the closed cabin door at the sound of Jess Tiverton's voice.

"They're finding fault with us, sonny. Perhaps they've reason to, but it ain't your fault. It's mine. But I'll give you a little more time and you'll be ready."

Suttle heard no more, for he turned on his heel and left. That night the mate had another talk with Tripper Tarboy, but found little solace in the old fisherman's words.

"Tempor's right," Tripper said. "You and I know the reason for his actions right enough, but others don't. And every crew's a worse one and we ain't pullin' the fish. It's lookin' blacker."

To the story of Jess Tiverton there remains but one more episode, the last trip he made as master of the Ruth McKelvie. Autumn fishing passed with conditions going from bad to worse and the Ruth went down the harbor one morning late in October with as rough and poor a crew as ever sailed on a Banker out of Boston. Hangers-on about the wharves, most of them, fellows who were down and out and saw a bed and food aboard the ship. The longer the trip the better they would like it. Fellows who had heard stories of Tiverton's eccentricities yet took the jobs because they needed jobs badly, not because they had a glimmer of understanding of the captain's sorrow.

"Imagine those rats forward aboard the Blue Belle in the old days," said Suttle disgustedly to old Tarboy.

"You've little call to kick," answered Tripper, taking a liberty born of long years and of friendship. "I've to sleep along with 'em."

On the trip down some of them overheard Jess talking to himself, and one, a burly Swede shipping his first trip, made free to mock him behind his back. Suttle overheard and swung once with his big right fist, setting the fellow down and knocking a tooth out.

"I'll teach you manners to your captain," the mate gritted. "You won't ever stand knee high to him if you live a thousand years."

That ended that, and the others took cognizance, yet it was the first time George Suttle had used his fists aboard any boat in nearly twenty years; there is in the fishing fleet small necessity of brutality; his action was a bad sign.

The Swede was a vindictive sort and he made small talk in the fore-castle and such was the crew that he soon had organized a little clique of trouble makers.

The vessel had fair weather until she made easterly of Sable island on the outside run, when a cold northerly blow set in for two days. Followed another spell of clear days with a bit of excellent fishing for a change and then an easterly, accompanied by fog. When the shroud lifted there was a full week of fine, calm weather and Suttle drove the men in the knowledge that Jess Tiverton's Ruth needed a good trip in order to set her master right with the owners. He recognized the difficulties of overcoming any handicap with such a crew as was given him, but he did his best with men who took no interest in the size of their shares.

He drove them and they cared not for the driving. The Swede and his dory mate pulled the smallest hauls; others, influenced by the fellow, soldiered at their work and accomplished as little as possible without incurring the anger of the mate.

They awakened one morning to a light drizzle of rain, a flat calm of sea and a promise of fog. The rain ended at noonday and the fog set in; the dories which had been ordered to work close at hand came over the side.

Jess Tiverton went to his cabin and stayed there and, because he hesitated to intrude, Suttle ate his dinner alone. Later he played cribbage with Tripper Tarboy and they had, as usual, some talk of the captain.

"It's a fog like this'll take his memory back," said Tripper. "He'll be makin' bad weather of it there alone. Maybe you better go in with him."

With the dusk the fog set in heavier than before and Suttle named the watches, doubling them, for every two hours. He retired early, leaving the captain reading half aloud by the light of the big lamp swinging from the center of the ceiling beam.

Suttle fell off to sleep quickly enough, for Tiverton's reading was a habit of long standing to which he had become accustomed. He was not due on deck himself until one o'clock, and his was the faculty of being able to waken at any hour he chose.

Jess Tiverton's voice brought him sitting up in his bunk. The lamp, still lit, was dying and beneath it and within its sickly, shifting glare Jess stood staring past the shadow of his own bunk.

"Quick, sonny! Quick now!" he cried. "Call all hands and get sail on her!"

Suttle swung his feet onto the floor. "What's up?" he asked.

Jess Tiverton never looked at him. "All hands!" he shouted again. "Get her anchor broke oot!"

Suttle glanced at the clock nailed beside his berth. Its hands showed

Things New and Old About the Bible : BY REV. W. P. KING

Pastor First Methodist Church, Gainesville, Ga.

Readings for Laymen and Preachers.

"HOME FOLKS," by Dr. Clovis G. Chappell, is published by the Cookesbury Press, Nashville, Tennessee. The price is $1.50.

DR. W. P. KING

This is the sixth volume of the author. The former volumes have served to make the readers anxious for this one, and it promises to be the best seller of the house.

The author passes from a beautiful tribute in the dedication to the most important and controlling member of his own family into a discussion of the various members of the home.

One soon discovers the charm in this volume which has made the books of Dr. Chappell so popular, not only with preachers, but with laymen.

To read the chapter on "The Baby" leaves an indelible impression. There is throughout the sympathetic human touch.

There belongs to the style of the author, the clearness of a mountain lake.

He deals in short pointed sentences, and avoids the obscurities of long-drawn-out phrases and clauses.

With characteristic brevity and clearness, he shows marriage to be a divine institution and not merely a civil compact of our making. In the straightforward, heart-to-heart talks, he depicts some of the sins and follies responsible for failures of married life—"how the wedding ring may be lost before it is worn,—how a marriage may be doomed before it is consummated." He emphatically states that "all dangers that threaten the success of the marriage relations can be overcome by intelligent and vital Christianity conscientiously observed." Common sense combined with a clear understanding of human frailties characterizes his appeal for observance of the sacred obligations of marital relation. "Home Folks" should be read by every member of the family.

Dr. Chappell is one of the most popular pastors of the church, and is at present pastor of the First Methodist church of Memphis, Tenn.

"In the Palace of Amuhia," by Florence W. Pickard. The George H. Doran company, publishers, New York city. Price, $2.00.

This is a romance of the days of Nebuchadnezzar. The personality of his lovely queen, Amuhia, pervades the story. She was betrothed to a king whom she had never seen—and through the difficulties she meets in this foreign kingdom her strong individuality develops greater charm and character. Even the attack of the Medes upon the palace cannot destroy her serenity.

It is she who befriends Daniel when he is brought, a prisoner, to the palace, and who furthers Daniel's unfulfilled romance with a beautiful Egyptian girl.

Through the strange embroideries of past customs and traditions, vivid and compelling figures stand forth. And the idealism and faith of certain fine men and women of the past is a challenge to the present generation.

Such a story is certain to increase the interest of young people in the narrative and history of the Bible.

"Suburbs of Christianity," by Dr. Ralph W. Sockman. The Abingdon Press, New York city.

The author of this volume of sermons is pastor of Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal church in New York city.

As one enters into the current of the vital messages and feels the charm of the author's clear and forceful style, he does not wonder that Dr. Sockman has held the pastorate of this great church from the time he left the Theological seminary.

The volume receives its name from the title of the first sermon, "The Suburbs of Christianity."

The author enumerates and elaborates four boundary lines which mark the separation between the suburbs of Christianity and the real vital Christianity of the kingdom of God.

The first declaration of Jesus is, "If ye abide in my words, then are ye truly my disciples."

The first boundary line is on abiding loyalty to Jesus' teachings.

The second declaration of Jesus is, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

Brotherliness is the second line which divides the suburbs of Christianity from the City of God proper.

The third declaration of Jesus is, "Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit; and so shall ye be my disciples."

Fruitfulness of life and character is the third boundary line of the City of God.

The fourth declaration of Jesus is, "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me."

Cross-bearing is the fourth distinction mark of real Christianity. The author makes the clear discrimination between "burdens" and "those in the flesh" which are outside the range of choice, and "the cross," which is a voluntary identification with an allegiance to Jesus Christ.

Other sermons in the volume are equally impressive and illuminating. The preacher would do well to secure this volume who wished to make a valuable addition to his store of sermonic literature.

"Religious Unrest and Its Remedy," by Dr. Jones A. Anderson. Fleming H. Revell company, New York city. Price, 75 cents.

When we observe that this book was first published in 1913, we see how truly it is a pioneer in our modern thought problems. We have in this volume the clear statement of the findings of historical Biblical criticism which are now accepted without question by Biblical scholars.

Dr. Anderson deserves credit for a clear declaration of these ideas at a time when it required more courage to commit oneself to the verified facts.

The author shows the fallacy of the a priori method of arriving at the doctrines of Biblical inspiration and revelation. He writes: "God has never required that a man should in the name of religion, stultify his own reason. What is needed always is that we should be willing to ascertain what is vital and cease to quarrel about our interpretations when the core of vital truth is not involved. A broad tolerance in things non-essential is one of the marks of a gentleman and a Christian."

The larger portion of the volume holds forth Jesus Christ as the central fact of our religion and the remedy for our unrest.

A fresh recognition of this volume is needed in our present-day discussion, and its wide circulation would do much in clearing up some of our present confusion.

The World's Greatest Pictures

"ADRASTUS AND HYPSPYLE" By GIORGIONE

This is the 24th of a series of 52 greatest paintings, which represent the choice of the art directors throughout North America. Reproduction of this art masterpiece appears in today's Constitution rotogravure section.

BY EUGENE P. CONLEY.

Thirty-four years from the time birth gives us life until the soil claims the body is not a long stay on this planet earth—still, history's pages would be incomplete without those golden deeds performed in the years of youth. Progress is not in the category of seniority rule. It leans heavily on the shoulders of those who do things, be he young or old.

Alexander conquered the world—founded cities and died in his 33d year; Franz Schubert, gifted with the ability to translate beautiful, musical thoughts, died in his 31st year; and Giorgione, the most poetic of Renaissance painters, died in his 34th year, in the prime of life, when youth's star was still high in the heaven, and its setting an event for future years. But brief as were their brilliant careers they left indelible imprints in the Book of Life.

Giorgione (Jor-jo'-ne) was born in the little village of Castelfranco, located 25 miles northwest of Venice, in the year 1477. Little is known of his early life, so no complete biography can be written. This much is known, he was born in the humblest of circumstances. There's the keynote of his success—art and poverty are blood relations.

"Adrastus and Hypsipyle," (Hip-sip-i-le) is Giorgione's masterpiece. It is the property of the Giovanelli Palace, Venice. The painting depicts a scene from classical mythology. Adrastus on his way to the siege of Thebes, was searching for a spring in the Nemean Forest when he suddenly came upon Hypsipyle. This daughter of the king of Lemnos, driven from her own country had disguised herself as a nurse, and was caring for the infant son of the king of Nemea. Giorgione has painted his conception of how they appeared as they met on the banks of the stream.

The figures are subsidiary—it is the background that holds the charm. In all probability this background is a scene in Castelfranco, for he loved his native town and painted many pictures of it. The flash of lightning in the black clouds in the distance gives evidence of an approaching storm. Everything about the painting is calm and placid. It is the lull before the storm.

Giorgione studied under Giovanni Bellini, and one of his fellow students was Titian. Entering into a friendly discussion one day with some sculptors concerning the relative merits of painting and sculpture, Giorgione boldly asserted he could paint a single figure to show the front, back and both sides of it. To prove his statement, he picked up a brush and painted the figure of a man with his back to the spectator; at his feet a body of clear water revealed the front form, while to the left was painted some armor in which shone the reflection of his left side; on the other side a mirror reflected the right side. "Thus," writes Vasari, "did Giorgione show that painting is capable of presenting more at one view than is practicable in sculpture."

In the year 1510, when art lovers were singing his praises, and his future seemed to be strewn with flowers, a deadly plague broke out, and in the course of a year it numbered thousands among its victims, including the youthful master, Giorgione, and the art of the Renaissance suffered its first great loss.

CROSSED WIRES

now through no intention or purpose, he was feeling an aching tenderness at the thought of her. He knew what this meant.

"Confound it, I've tried to fall in love a lot of times when there were no barriers. Now I've got it good and plenty and with a girl that I'm in honor bound to lay off of. Talk about tough luck!"

He revolved the situation dejectedly. Something inside of him which he would not put into words told him insistently that Virginia—well, liked him, perhaps a good deal. The question was, did she care for Rasher? That was the crucial point. And even if she did not, would he ever be able to convince her that he had acted as a loyal and honorable friend should act?

In his mind it was a point of honor. He had embarked in this enterprise in a spirit of fun and adventure. His mission was to circumvent the Count even if, in so doing, he might have to make a little love to the girl. He hadn't the slightest fear that his own emotions might become seriously involved.

But love is something you cannot turn on or off, like a faucet. It comes, sometimes unbidden and even unwelcome. The mind counsels one course, the heart another. The heart repeats the advantageous marriage which the mind advocates.

"Love," reflected the unhappy Wells, "is a damned illogical and unreasonable thing. You can't head it off, or steer it up a side street, once it gets going."

He walked gloomily back to the inn, deep in thought, and hardly noticed Celeste, whose eyes filled with tears at his preoccupation. It was the first time in years that an honest tear, mothered by an honest emotion, had dimmed those cold, designing black eyes.

One had the feeling that some one would sooner or later have to pay for those tears.

INSTALLMENT VI

"In the Moonlight."

LESLIE had realized for a long time, and it was a constant subject for self-reproach, that she had less and less desire for her fiancé's society. "He is really not interested in me, Dick," she said. "Harry is so absorbed in his treasure hunt and his queer chase after the elixir of life—"

"He's told you that, has he?" asked Dick, quickly.

"Why, of course!" she scoffed. "Do you know, Dick, he has almost convinced me there is something in his idea?"

She waited for him to reply.

"Don't you think so?"

"In the life water . . . perhaps there is."

"And in the treasure?" she asked.

"Maybe. Generations of Chelfords have hunted for that wretched gold, and I suppose in the last four hundred years almost as much money has been spent in the search as the treasure is worth! I'm perfectly sure in my own mind that good Queen Bess of pious memory bagged every cent of it!"

"And I'm perfectly sure she did not," was the surprising reply. "I've been reading Elizabethan history very carefully, and the year that your ancestor hid his gold was the year that the queen was so hard pressed for money that she had to borrow from the Lombards."

He stopped.

"Is that so?" incredulously.

"Absolutely. And if you weren't such a skeptic and would read a little more, you would know what any school child could tell you—that in 1852 the queen was broke. Do you object to that vulgar word?"

"It is a familiar one, at any rate," he laughed.

They had reached the deep cutting, and he turned to the left, opened a gate, and they walked up a little path toward the ruins of Chelford abbey.

The moon was showing through a rift in the clouds.

"You ought to see the abbey by moonlight, if you've never seen it. It's rather beautiful," he said as he gave her a hand to assist her up the steep path.

As they came in sight of the broken walls and towers of this ancient place of peace something of the solemnity of the scene entered her heart and she stood still looking spellbound upon the wreckage of a once great abbey. The abbey ruins stood on the broadest surface of what was locally known as "The Mound"—the high embankment which ran almost from Fossaway abbey to the road, following the course of the little Ravensrill. Here, if tradition spoke the truth, a place of sacrifice had stood, before the English church had risen in flint, before the Norman monks laid chisel to stone on their great abbey.

The moon softened and idealized the broken stonework, and in her mind Leslie went back through the years to those ancient times when the black-robed figures of the monks moved where she now stood. Below, to the left, she could see the fret of sparkling silver where the moon reflected in the Ravensrill. Here they had sat, those ancient men, with their fishing rods, discussing the little events of their narrow world. They had passed into dust, and this great abbey, the pride of their eyes and the work of their hands, was crumbling rapidly into nothingness.

"It is wonderful!" she breathed.

Were her eyes deceiving her? She could have sworn she saw something moving in the shadow of the old tower. He heard the quick intake of her breath.

"What is it?" he asked.

"I don't know—my imagination, I think. I thought I saw somebody moving there."

He followed the direction of her eyes.

"There would be nobody here at this time of the night, unless it were the Black Abbot," he said jocularly, "and we're not scared of him, are we?"

"I'm not, for one," she said with a firmness that she was far from feeling.

At that moment she heard something—something that turned her blood to water. It was a low moan of anguish, a sobbing diminuendo of sound that began on a high note and wailed down the scale until it was inaudible.

"What was that?" she asked, grasping his arm.

He did not speak; he was straining his eyes toward the shadows.

Again the sound, this time a wail that ended in a scream. He caught the girl by the shoulder. At that moment he had seen a figure moving away from the abbey, toward the river. A tall, black figure that showed clearly in the moonlight. She saw it, too.

"Don't leave me, Dick!" she begged as she felt him strain away from her.

Then, of a sudden, she felt his tension.

"Let him go," he said, half to himself.

She clung to him desperately, frantically, as the figure stumbled and staggered toward the trees that would presently engulf him. The dreadful thing ran on, stopping now and again to turn and gibber and mouth at the man and the woman who stood motionless on the edge of the cutting. Waving wild arms, now howling in dreadful glee, now screaming in senseless fear, it vanished in the dark of the wood—an obscene, uncleanly thing that belonged to bad dreams and the horrid imaginings of madness. Far away in the distance came the howl of him, and then the night swallowed him up.

"How dreadful!"

And then her knees gave under her and she remembered no more.

Leslie opened her eyes and frowned up into the face that was bent over her. She was lying on the verge of the road, for Dick had carried her down into the cutting and a hundred yards toward Willow House.

"O, how awful!" She shuddered and closed her eyes. "It was the Black Abbot?"

Dick Alford did not reply for a while. His anxiety for the girl was such that all other interests had passed from his mind.

"I am all right now," she said and, with his assistance, stood shakily on her feet. "I told you I was a fool. This is my crazy day! Dick, what was it?"

"He was too far away from me to see," said Dick; "probably one of our stupid villagers under the influence of drink."

She shook her head.

"No, it was not that, Dick! It was . . ." She shuddered again.

"I think I'd better go home."

"I think you'd be wise," he said gravely. "I wish I hadn't brought you out now."

She laughed a little shakily and clung to him tighter.

"In a way, I'm glad you did," she said as they walked slowly toward her home. "Dick, I had all sorts of queer dreams; just before I woke up I felt somebody kiss me. It was so convincing that I can still feel the lips on my cheek."

"I kissed you," he said, without shame. "I thought the shock would bring you to life!"

Her laughter was almost hysterical, for Leslie's nerves were jangled and on edge.

"You might at least have denied that," she said. "Dick, you have no subtlety!"

As they walked slowly toward the house she noticed that he looked back once or twice.

"You're not expecting that—that thing to follow us, are you?" she asked, her teeth chattering.

"No; I thought I heard a car." (Which was true.) "I'll swear I saw a haze of light over the crest of the road; but I must have been mistaken."

He was not mistaken, and knew it. A car had been following them, had been slowly ascending the hill to the cutting; he had seen the reflected rays from the lamps distinctly, and had heard the soft purr of the engine. What was more certain than anything else, the car could not have turned in that narrow road; so that the only explanation was that the unknown driver had switched off his lights and stopped his machine.

"Let me look at you." He turned her to the moonlight and lifted her face. "I don't know whether you're horribly pale or whether it's a trick of the moon," he said, "but you look mighty ill! You had better go straight to bed, preferably without seeing your brother."

"Why?" she asked, in surprise.

"I don't want this spook story to get around, for one thing," he said.

"And for another—O, well, the other doesn't matter."

Leslie realized that she was walking at a much slower pace than her physical weakness justified. She was still a little shaky, but in every sense had recovered from the shock. Too sane to believe in ghosts, she had nevertheless been shaken by the terrible experience. She leaned heavily on Dick's arm as they paced up the avenue to the house, turning on to the grass, that Arthur should not hear their footsteps and come out to give them a boisterous welcome. Presently, with a sigh, she dropped his arm.

"I'm glad I went out," she said in a low voice. "And I'm rather glad . . ." She did not finish the sentence.

The silence that followed was a little disturbing for both of them. Suddenly she faced him.

"Dick, do you want me to marry your brother?"

He did not answer.

"Do you—really?"

She heard his sigh in the dark. She could not see his face, for they stood in the shadow of a great cedar immediately before the house.

"I don't know," he said. There was a bleakness in his voice she had heard once before. "It isn't a question of my liking. I can offer you no reason why you should not marry him. You must do what you want, Leslie. The decision must rest entirely with you—and if I were a praying man I would spend the night praying that you did right."

"Do you wish me to marry him?" she asked again.

"I cannot tell you." His voice was hard, and there swept over her a wave of unreasonable anger and resentment against his detachment.

"I won't ask you that question again," she said, her voice trembling. "Good-night, Dick."

She ran into the hall and up to her room, and long after she had gone he stood where she had left him, looking wistfully at the door which had closed upon her.

With something like despair at his heart Dick Alford walked quickly along the road toward Fontwell Cutting. He had something to distract his mind for the moment.

There was no sign of the car, and instead of passing through the cutting gates he continued over the brow of the hill.

When he went out at night he invariably carried a small flashlight (he kept a supply of them at the house, for his electric supply had a trick of failing at inconvenient moments), and this he took from his pocket and, switching it on, threw the light on the road, sweeping the beam from side to side. This was not a main thoroughfare, and, excepting his own and Gwyn's car and an occasional tradesman's car, there was little traffic. He saw the diamond-shaped impress of Gwyn's tires, could pick out his own little machine's, and presently he saw a new track—the track of tires with an arrow-shaped tread. He could distinguish the exact spot at which it had stopped. Apparently the driver had made no attempt to turn, but had gone backward some distance. Dick followed the trail until it curved around, apparently into an open field. The wagon gate was closed, but on the loamy earth the mark of wheels was very apparent.

"Red farm!" thought Dick, and, opening the gate, he went into the field. His search was a very short one, for the deserted car was parked close under the hedge parallel with the road. All the lights were out, but the radiator was still hot. He examined the machine carefully; it bore a London number and was new—an American touring car, replete with all the gadgets of its kind. He made a careful note of the number, and, walking back to the gate, sat on the top rail and waited.

His vigil was not a protracted one. From where he sat he could see over the swelling hill the top curve of the abbey arch, and five minutes after he had taken up his position he saw a figure, silhouetted against the skyline, cross the brow and descend the hill toward him.

Fossaway park was inclosed in a large-meshed wire net fence, which offered no obstacle to any person who wished to surmount it; but the stranger had evidently not reconnoitered the ground very thoroughly, for Dick heard the clang of the wire as some heavy object struck against it, a curse, and presently he could discern a figure climbing over the wide mesh and dropping into the road.

For a few seconds it was out of sight, and then he saw it again, silhouetted against the white of the road. Nearer and nearer it came.

"Good evening, Mr. Gilder," said Dick, politely. "Are you seeing the sights of Chelfordbury?"

Gilder started violently and almost dropped the heavy stick he was carrying.

"Hullo!" he stammered. "Who the dickens are you?"

A beam of light shot suddenly from his hand and focused the questioner.

"O, you!" said Gilder, taking a long breath. "Gosh! you scared me! I was just admiring your old ruins by moonlight. They're rather fine."

"On behalf of the ruins, I thank you," said Dick, with elaborate courtesy. "Any nice things that you can say about Chelford abbey are deeply appreciated by its present owner."

The man was disconcerted and obviously ill at ease.

"I left my car in the field; I thought it might get in the way of traffic—" he began.

"The traffic around here between ten and midnight is not very numerous," said Dick; "but if you have the illusion that Red Farm is your property it is quite understandable that your car should be parked there. What is the game, Gilder?"

He was conscious that the man's eyes were peering at him.

"I don't know what you mean by 'game.' Is it unlawful to admire a moonlight view?"

"It is unlawful to trespass on my brother's property," said Dick. "May I repeat my question; what is the game?"

"I don't understand you. Do you mind letting me get through that gate? I am going home."

Dick Alford descended from the gate slowly and pushed it open.

"You are a suspicious character, Gilder."

The man snapped round at him.

"What the devil do you mean?"

"Just what I say. You are a suspicious character. It is very suspicious to find you loafing around Fossaway Park at this hour of the night, particularly after certain things have happened recently."

"Do you think I am the Black Abbott?" sneered the man, and Dick's chuckle came from the darkness.

"There are many interesting possibilities about you, Gilder. What did you expect to find in the abbey?"

"I tell you I was merely admiring the view by moonlight. If that is an offense you can bring me before a bench of magistrates."

Dick, his hands in his pockets, stood watching the man as he switched on the lights of the car and started it up.

"The place to admire the ruins is from the crest of the hill, not from the ruin itself," he said. "If you had been a normal admirer you would never have been out of sight. May I also suggest that it wasn't necessary to switch off your lights or to hide your car—the best view of the abbey is from the upper road. Gilder, you had better be careful."

"Is that a threat?"

"It is a warning," said Dick. "And a man as clever as you would not lightly despise such a warning. By the way, my solicitors are starting an action tomorrow to set aside your agreement with Farmer Leonard. I am hoping that you will not involve yourself in the expense of defending the action."

"That is a matter that I shall discuss with your lawyers," said Gilder as he started the car.

Dick watched the machine as it waddled over the furrows and turned on to the road and followed it out, closing the gate behind it.

"Do you know anything about racing, Gilder?"

Gilder turned with a jerk. Was this man privy to his secrets?

"I know a little. Why?"

"Do you know what a warning-off notice is?"

"Yes; it is a notice issued by the jockey club warning people off Newmarket heath."

"Splendid!" said Dick. "Will you take a warning-off notice from me? I warn you off Willow House and all that is contained therein!"

"And if I don't accept the warning?"

"You'll be sorry, as I've remarked before," said Dick.

Gilder jammed in his clutch and the car jerked forward with a whine, and soon its tail lights had disappeared round the end of the road.

The second son climbed the fence, though the gate was near enough, and, passing the abbey ruins, walked briskly towards Fossaway manor. His way brought him past the wing of the house in which his brother's library was situated. One of the big leaded windows was open and he caught a glimpse of Harry at his desk, sitting in the half light, his head on his hands, a book before him. Dick sighed and continued on his way.

Thomas, the footman, answered the bell he rang.

"Get me some coffee and biscuits. I shall be working late," he said.

When the man had gone he went to his desk and unlocked the post bag that had come up from the station that night and shook out a heap of letters. He sorted them over carefully, and, selecting one, opened it. The letter bore the royal crest and the plain address "New Scotland Yard" and was from an old school friend of his:

Dear Dick: Thank you for your rather extraordinary letter, but I am afraid we can do nothing for you officially. Private detectives, of course, are punk for your purpose, and the best I can do for you is as follows: We have a detective-sergeant at headquarters named Puttler—you may have seen his name in connection with the Hatton Garden robbery. He is a very efficient man and marked for promotion, but rather a weird-looking bird. At the Yard we call him "Monkey Puttler," though he is universally liked, in spite of this unflattering soubriquet. Puttler never takes any kind of holiday, and is generally supposed to spend his spare time in criminal investigation and to sleep in an odd corner of the Yard. He is entitled to six weeks' holiday leave. Of course, in ordinary circumstances he would never dream of taking six minutes, but I have had a talk with him, and, with the complete approval of our chief (it was necessary to tell him what you wanted), Puttler will spend his holiday at Fossaway manor. As I said before, he is rather a queer looking creature, a rabid teetotaler, a strong churchman, with violent views on church music. You can rely absolutely upon his discretion. I've told him that you will pay him ten pounds a week and all his expenses. I only wish I could let you have him permanently, but I trust that in six weeks your trouble will be cleared up.

Dick put the letter carefully in his inside pocket and, walking across the hall, went into the library. Lord Chelford heard the door close and looked up.

"Hullo, Dick!" he said, quite amiably. "What is the news?"

Before he answered Dick Alford walked to the window through which he had seen his brother, pulled it close, and fastened the lock.

"What is wrong?" growled Chelford.

"Our monkish friend has been seen," he said, "and I think it advisable that your window should be kept closed."

"I've been over to see Leslie," he said. "Put away that infernal book and talk."

With evident reluctance Lord Chelford closed the thick tome over which he had been poring and leaned back in his chair with an air of resignation.

"Leslie? I don't see very much of her," he said. "She's a very intelligent girl and knows how busy I am. Not every woman would show so much understanding. Did you see Arthur?"

"I had a phone message saying that he was coming over in the morning. He wants me to sign some documents in connection with Leslie's estate—good fellow, Arthur."

"Very," said Dick, without a trace of sarcasm in his voice.

"Yes, I owe a lot to Arthur." Harry looked up through his horn-rimmed spectacles and nodded as he spoke. "I shouldn't have met Leslie, and certainly I shouldn't have had any idea of marrying," he went on, naively, "but Arthur was very keen to get a husband for her who wasn't a fortune hunter. And, of course, the money will be useful."

Dick listened patiently to this disjointed explanation for the forthcoming marriage. He had heard it before in identically the same terms.

"Why do you want to marry money at all?" he asked. "We're not paupers."

Harry Chelford shrugged his thin shoulders.

"I suppose we're not," he said, indifferently. "I never bother about the money side. You're such a clever old bird, Dick, that I'm spared that. By heavens, I don't know where I should be if it wasn't for you. Do you get all you want yourself, Dicky?"

Dick Alford nodded.

"A nice girl," his brother went on, "and, as I say, a sensible girl. I wish you'd get her over to dinner one night; there are several things I want to talk about to Arthur. There's the Doncaster estate, for example. I had a letter from somebody the other day saying that they were willing to pay a very big price for Creethorpes. I don't see any reason in the world why we shouldn't sell."

"But I do," said Dick, puffing slowly at his pipe. "I also have had the offer, and when I get one that approximates to my eyes as being near the Creethorpes value we may sell. But the price that has been offered is ludicrous."

"A hundred and twenty thousand pounds?" murmured Lord Chelford, shaking his head disparagingly. "I don't see how you can improve on that, Dick."

"We can try," said Dick.

His eyes were roaming the desk, and after a while he saw a book which was seldom far away from his brother's hand, and, getting up, he reached over and took it, Chelford watching with a triumphant smile.

"It's got you, has it, old man?" he asked. "I thought it would, sooner or later. You're too sensible to dismiss the Chelford treasure as a myth."

Dick turned the old pages covered with pale writing—the diary of that lord of Chelford who had suffered for his disloyalty at the hands of the common headman.

The idea had come to him in the middle of the previous night, and all that day the old diary had come in and out of his mind at odd and incongruous moments. Whilst it was not true that he had been won over to his brother's faith in the existence of the treasure, his curiosity had been piqued by a vague recollection of one line in the diary. He turned it up now and read:

These ingots he shall put away in the safe place if yet the weather be dry and the drought continues, though rain is near at hand.

"I am only wondering," he said as he handed back the book, "what effect the drought had upon the hiding place—why rain would have spoiled his plan, as apparently it would."

"Ha! ha!" said his lordship, almost boisterously. "The poison is working, Richard! You will become as ardent a treasure hunter as I. Shall I tell you where the gold was hidden?" He leaned forward, his elbows on the table, his eyes gleaming. "In a cave, or an underground chamber of some kind. There are three references in this diary to a chesil." He turned the pages rapidly. "Listen; here is one," he said, and read:

This day Tom Goodman brought me the chesil from Brighthelmstone.

"Which is Brighton, I presume?" asked Dick.

His brother nodded, turning the pages.

"Here is another reference," he said.

The new chesil has come. I have left it near the place and those dull wights who see it will know little of its value to me.

Dick smiled.

"It must have been something remarkable in the way of chesils," he said. "It doesn't mention its size or its shape?"

"Nowhere; I have searched the diary for that."

There came a tap at the door; it was Thomas.

"Will you have your coffee here, sir?"

"No; put it in my room."

"Are you working tonight, Dick?" asked Chelford.

"After you've gone to bed, Harry," said Dick, with a laugh, "and I think it is about time you went. One of these days you'll have a breakdown and I'll have to call in your pet abomination."

"Ugh!" shivered Chelford. "Never bring a doctor into this house—I loathe them!"

"I shall sleep well tonight," said his lordship, pushing back his long black hair with a characteristic gesture. "If I'd only known of that stuff before!"

"What stuff is this?" asked Dick, good humoredly.

Never a day passed that some new patent medicine did not come into the house, some cure-all, accompanied by pages of closely printed literature. Lord Chelford's patent medicine habit was a vicious circle. The literature of one cure-all revealed symptoms of which he had never been conscious before. No sooner had he settled upon a miraculous nostrum than it was superseded by one even more dazzling in its promises.

Dick followed him up the stairs into the long room where he spent the few hours he could tear himself away from his library. A four-poster bed, an old dressing chest, a deep closet in which his scanty wardrobe hung, and a very long table, the surface of which was literally covered with bottles and small boxes, comprised the furniture of his room with the exception of a battered armchair before the fireplace. There must have been over a hundred boxes and packages on the table. Some of these came in consequence of standing orders given years before and never countermanded; these had never been opened. There were cures for asthma, for bronchitis, for rheumatism, marvelous liniments, amazing sleep inducers, nerve tonics—every disease to which the human system is liable had its antidote in that collection.

By the side of his bed on a small table was a jug of hot water and a glass. Chelford opened a tin chosen from the medley of bottles and boxes, took out two small white pellets, and dropped them into a glass, covering them with water. He stirred them till they were dissolved, Dick watching, half amused, half pitiful.

"Ah!" Chelford put down the glass. "That's the stuff! No drugs, Dick—just a mixture of natural elements that brings rest to the tired brain and sleep to weary eyes!"

"I guess you're quoting the label," said Dick, with a laugh. "Even cocaine is a natural element. And there's nothing nearer to nature than morphia. You're an old goop, Harry, and if I had my way I'd take all these infernal bottles and dump them into the round pond."

"I should probably be dead in a month," said Harry with a smile as he began to undress, "and you'd have to stand your trial for willful murder!"

Dick closed the door behind him, waited till he heard the bolt shot home, then went downstairs to his own room. His coffee was waiting, and he began his three-hour task; the opening and answering of letters, the examination of leaflets, and the inspection of bills. There were checks to be signed, envelopes to be addressed, and it was nearly three o'clock before he rose stiffly, and, pushing open the door of the French windows, walked out upon the lawn.

There was a sign of dawn in the sky. The air was sweet and pure, and he drew great breaths of nature's champagne before he lit his pipe and strolled noiselessly along the lawn.

five minutes of midnight. Midnight, and a wool fog, and a skipper calling for all hands and sail!

The mate looked once more at Jess Tiverton and had a flashing thought of Torrey Lamberis. He pulled on his boots and ran on deck where the watch was smoking and using the fog horn to good effect.

"All hands!" he roared. "Rout 'em out and set her jib to break her anchor out. We're moving in a hurry!"

The spark of a cigarette butt went spinning over the side and somebody drawled, "God's sake. Listen to the man."

Suttle paused, undecided whether to knock the man down, and then made a rush for the forecabin, half tumbling down the ladder and shouting as he went. Men crawled out of their bunks, cursing, and the mate felt Tripper's hand upon his sleeve.

"What's wrong?" old Tarboy asked.

"You know as much as I do. Jess is carrying on again. He says all hands and sail on her in a hurry."

The big Swede paused in the act of pulling on his sou'wester and remarked, "Ay ban tink he capain baffy." He got no further because Suttle hit him again.

Somebody in the half darkness said, "To hell with Tiverton and his crazy notions. I'm going back to sleep." Tripper Tarboy's hand reached out and caught the man by the throat.

"Git up, you scum, or I'll bash your head," threatened Tripper.

On deck again Suttle found the watch, aroused, setting the jib. Only a faint breath of a breeze but the sail filled and carried the bow around, breaking the anchor loose. They had it in.

Jess Tiverton was on deck then. They heard his voice, a new note in the fog: "Tell 'em to get mainsail up, sonny. Tell 'em quick, now. Hurry!"

Most of the crew stood dumb, aghast at the madness of it. A young voice called, "Pipe down, you old nut!" but Jess Tiverton did not hear.

They got her mainsail up, Suttle and Tripper doing most of the work and Tripper wasting a lot of breath to swear at the good-for-nothing crew. The big sheet filled and the Ruth McKelvie started to lay off.

Then, right above the schooner's deck and a little off her port side there came the weird scream of a liner's siren and a hundred lights snapped out of the fog! She came rushing toward the Ruth, was off her stern for a moment, on the starboard the next. And was gone! They felt the breath of her as she passed scant feet away. Scant feet to spare.

From the time that racing liner shot out of the fog until she had disappeared again in the void—a matter of less than a minute—no word was spoken aloud aboard the Ruth McKelvie, nor was the fog horn sounded. Men who had mocked Jess Tiverton were in turn mocked by that silence.

As the Ruth dipped forward in the wash her captain's voice rang clear along the ship: "You did a nice job, sonny. I guess you're ready."

The vessel didn't drop anchor again that voyage. Old age had caught Jess Tiverton that night. He was an old, old man.

"We'll go along in, George," he told Suttle. "I've sailed my last trip to sea and I guess you and Young Jess can look after her alone now. And do a better job." He laid his hand on Suttle's arm and his voice was that of a pleading, old man. "We ain't been making good trips, George. All on account of me and my goings on. I've known all along. But I had to be sure he was ready to take her over. I had to be sure, didn't I, George?"

George Suttle answered, his own voice a little shaky: "I guess you ain't got no cause to worry."

That is why, between his stories at the new Fish pier, if you ask old Jess Tiverton about himself he will mumble and look off up the harbor and out to where the green water merges with the deeper blue of the sea itself. His boy, Young Jess, is out there with George Suttle on the Ruth McKelvie. Young Jess is the skipper now. He's a-sailin' of her.

keeping parallel with the face of the house.

He had never felt less sleepy, and he was debating in his mind whether he should take a cold bath and go on with some work that he had left unfinished on the previous day when he saw, only for a second, a pinpoint of light in the distance. It was a white, starlike flicker that dawned and disappeared almost instantly.

"If that isn't a flash lamp I'm a Dutchman," he muttered, went back into his room, and, taking down a shotgun, slipped a handful of cartridges into the pocket of his dinner jacket.

There had been a number of poaching affrays in the neighborhood, and the unknown poachers were a desperate gang who had never hesitated to shoot. Dick felt it best to be on the safe side, and, with the gun under his arm and two shells rammed home into the breech, he strolled across to where he had seen the light.

It is the fact that Dick Alford had no constitutional objection to poachers. His views on the subject had shocked many a hoary headed country justice, for Dick held to the line that it was pardonable for any man to "shoot for the cooking pot," and to him poaching was a mild joke.

The house and surrounding trees obstructed his view, but a five minutes' walk brought him through a thin plantation to the priory fields. Now he saw, unless his judgment was at fault, that the light must have come from the direction of the abbey ruins. He stood for ten minutes in the shadow of a wood, but no light showed. And then, as his foot was raised to walk forward, he saw it again—just a momentary flicker, and this time there was no doubt that it came from the abbey. No intelligent poacher would waste five minutes on that part of the estate, though there were trout in the Ravensrill and the burrows of a few hares in its banks.

Glimpses of Hollywood

crinkle about the brim with a felt bow to one side.

Bessie Love furnished the high spot to the party when she did several dance numbers by request including a very breath-taking Charleston and a hula that made even the Hawaiian boys grin with delight. She wore a simply cut dress of old rose georgette with plaits stitched from the shoulders to the hip where they fell loose in full folds to the hem which was bound in cut taffeta ruching. The swaying of the full skirt was quite appropriate to the dancing she did.

The hostess herself, Agnes Christine Johnson, wife of Frank Dazey, the playwright, was a graceful figure in black Spanish lace made over white satin with which she wore a varicolored silk scarf in red, gold and blue. Frank Dazey helped her greet many prominent executives and writers of the picture business who also were guests, including William Randolph Hearst, Jim Tully, Hunt Stromberg, Harry Rapf, Marcelde Sano and Irving Thalberg and other film folk including Rockliffe Fellowes, Bert Lytell, Matt Moore and King Vidor.

Bebe Daniels' announcement to the effect that she and Charley Paddock, the athlete, are to be married within the year astonished all Hollywood. Charley can be found almost anytime on Bebe's set watching her work when he is not working with her for Charlie is vivacious Bebe's leading man in her present film, "The Campus Flirt."

Charley is Bebe's second athletic favorite, it still being in Hollywood memory that before Jack Dempsey became interested in Estelle Taylor, Bebe Daniels and Jack were announced as affianced. And still prior to that Bebe was announced as engaged to Harold Lloyd. That was in 1918.

Charley Paddock, who is playing a prominent role in Bebe Daniels' new picture, "The Campus Flirt," that of a college athletic coach and trainer of Bebe, expressed himself as highly interested in pictures as a career while he was at work this week on Bebe's set. Charley intends to keep in touch with athletics, however, and is at present engaged to give a series of lectures on athletics for the Y. M. C. A.

Bebe herself on Thursday afternoon was going through the amusing motions of a girl taught to smoke—with the usual results—by a naughty college boy enacted by Gilbert Roland, former fiance of Clara Bow.

Bebe springs a new one on the muddy shoes gag for in this picture she goes boat riding with the same Gilbert and when he gets funny swims home. She does the swimming in a lovely fringed gown so that when she emerges from the waves with her reputation intact she looks quite all right for the fringes still hang nicely, although wet.

John Roche was faced with a problem of conduct this week in his work in "The Return of Peter Grimm," which he is making for Fox. He is supposed in the story to administer a hearty slapping to little Mickey McBann, who is a long standing friend of his. The two of them finally got it done to the director's satisfaction, but John is still fuming over the hard life of being a villain in pictures.

Conway Tearle and John Miljan are sporting grand before-the-war Russian uniforms over at the Warner Brothers studios, where Irene Rich is making "My Official Wife." Very swanky bottle green coats much laden with gold braid and insignia are worn with small red hats banded with black Astrakhan. Long clanking swords protrude from under the coat tails in a very martial manner and spurs clank merrily as they tramp about in the Muscovite Inn in which they find Irene. Miss Rich is discovered in a blond wig with long braids and Russian peasant costume which is vastly becoming to her.

Winnie Winkle Brings Happiness to Member of Constitution Family

Joy reigns today in the heart of one of The Constitution's big family of boys and girls.

And justly so, because Winnie Winkle has come to see the little also the most noted artist in America in drawing the latest creations in women's clothes, with the result that he is a very busy man. He, therefore, has not the opportunity to respond to the thousands pose as you request.

I receive thousands of letters from boys and girls all over the country for the same kind of picture, and regret that I cannot answer them all, as it girl in question—St. John Barnwell, attractive little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Barnwell, of 182 St. Charles avenue, Atlanta. Here is how it happened:

St. John has long been a daily follower of the doings of the attractive Winnie, who appears each morning on the comic page of The Constitution. So much in love with her had she fallen that she wrote The Constitution asking if she could not secure an original drawing of Winnie. This letter was promptly forwarded to Martin M. Branner, the artist from whose talented pen comes the daily doings of Winnie.

Now it so happens that Mr. Branner, in addition to directing Winnie's life from day to day is of requests he receives from all over the country for original drawings of the charming little character he created.

However, upon receipt from Clark Howell, editor of The Constitution, of the request from little Miss Barnwell, he took enough time off to write the following letter to St. John:

25 Penn Avenue,
Niatic, Conn.,

St. John Barnwell,

Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Miss Barnwell:

Enclosed I am sending you sketch of Winnie Winkle standing up for cut-out pur-would take so much time to make these pictures that I would have no time left to do my work.

It is only because Mr. Clark Howell, editor of The Constitution, wrote me a personal letter asking that I comply with your request, that I am doing so.

I hope you will find this picture satisfactory and thanking you for your interest in my little Winnie Winkle, I am Very sincerely yours,

MARTIN M. BRANNER.

So now, St. John is happy—so happy indeed, that if Mr. Branner knew how happy she is, he would be very happy, too.

The Ancients Also Had Dictionaries

We make use of the dictionary in some way almost every day, but how many of us know anything of its history? How many know where the idea of making books of words and their meanings started?

Scholars who have investigated these things tell us that the people of ancient Assyria and Babylonia were the first to make use of dictionaries; not for actual words, but for signs they used in writing.

It is to the ancient Greeks, however, that we owe the beginnings of our modern dictionaries. However, while the old dictionaries were few in number and could only be understood and used by a small number of educated people, our unabridged editions contain thousands of words and can be used by every one who can read.

Noah Webster's first dictionary was completed in 1806; but the first edition of Webster's International dictionary was not published until 1828. The Standard dictionary, published about 1895, is really a combination of Webster's work and the Century dictionary.

So the modern dictionaries we use today are the result of hundreds of years of study by learned men. Small wonder that we lay such emphasis on the value of words, and strive to spell and pronounce them correctly and know their meanings.

BOYS AND GIRLS STORY SECTION

THE COLORED CAT'S

UNLUCKY DAY.

BY Wm. DONAHY.

Mr. Nickeldick was just about to feed his Italian goldfish their morning breakfast of spaghetti when he happened to glance out of the window. His eyes nearly popped out of his rabbit head. He dropped the handful of spaghetti on one of the fish, completely knocking it off its fins.

He could hardly believe his eyes as he saw the colored cat toss a plateful of bacon over her shoulder. Next she threw a slice of toast and a fried egg over her shoulder and followed that with two doughnuts.

Throw a fried egg over her shoulder.

"Tilly must have lost her mittens," he gasped to himself. "She must be crazy." He hurried into the kitchen and met the colored cat on the back porch.

"Tilly!" he exclaimed. "What in the name of catnip were you doing out there throwing that food away?"

"Mistah Nickeldick, suh," answered the colored cat, "Ah was jus' takin' de cuss off a powahful bad luck sgin. Ah done sing befo' breakfast dis mo'n-ing, and dat is about de baddest luck yo' all can have. De only way yo' can done take de bad luck off is fo' to throw yo' breakfast ovah yo' left shouldah."

"Why, Tilly!" exclaimed Mr. Nickeldick, "you don't believe anything like that, do you?"

"Yah, suh," answered Tilly mournfully. "Ah is strictly scientific 'bout these mattahs, but Ah was a little late gettin' mah breakfast ovah my shoulder and Ah hope we all don't have no bad luck today."

"Don't worry about that," laughed Mr. Nickeldick as he walked away; "there is no danger."

"Ah hope not," answered Tilly,

Peeped into the parlor.

"but Ah is afraid somethin' is gwine fo' to happen, especially as de papah hangah is done comin' today." The colored cat busied herself clear-in gettin' out of the parlor, for Mr. Nickeldick had hired a paper hanger to do some work and he was expected at any minute.

The paper hanger was a fat pig with adenoids. He wore overalls up to his chin and chewed gum. He put up his ladder, made a big bucket of paste, and set to work, while the colored cat went mournfully about her work getting things ready for a gingerbread cake. She had just poured out a supply of molasses when she heard organ music coming from the street. She quickly wiped her hands on her apron and hurried to the front door. An Italian grayhound with an organ was making a trained mouse perform at the end of a string. Tilly hurried out to see the fun, but she had only a moment's pleasure, for a bumble bee, smelling the molasses, took after her and she fled for the house.

"There's some of dat bad luck comin'," she cried as she slammed the door. "Were yo' find a bumble bee yo' is gwine fo' to find bad luck."

The bumble bee was probably peeved at having the door slammed in its face, so it flew along until it reached one of the parlor windows that was open. It promptly flew in and nearly bumped into the paper hanger, who was standing on the stepladder. The pig saw the bee and struck at it with his paste brush. The bee dodged and stung the pig on the end of the nose.

The pig let out a bellow and fell off the ladder right into his bucket of paste. With his eyes blinded by the paste, the pig jumped up and started to run. He fell over the davenport and knocked down a rabbit clock. In getting to his feet he bumped his head against the mantel and upset four vases and a candlestick.

"LAWDY!" gasped the colored cat, who had heard all the noise out in the kitchen. "Dat sounds like ol' man bad luck hisself." She tremblingly tiptoed out into the hall and peeped through the parlor door. The pig was just climbing to his feet from the floor, where he had been rolling in the paste, paper, and other things that littered the place. He was almost entirely covered with pieces of paper, broken glass, clock wheels, and everything that would stick to his pasty self.

"HOWLIN' PARSNIPS," screamed the colored cat, "it's old man bad luck's ghost!"

She dashed out of the house and scampered up a dogwood tree before she had noticed what she had done.

"Ol' man bad luck is suddenly afoot me today," she cried. "Heah Ah done climb this tree fo' to get away from bad luck and Ah couldn't have done pick da worse tree. It's de baddest luck in de world fo' to climb a dogwood tree." She began to weep at the top of her cat lungs, which attracted the attention of a policecat policeman, who was passing by.

"What's wrong here?" asked the policeman, stopping under the tree.

"Ol' man bad luck is cuttin' up in de house there," cried the colored cat, pointing toward the house.

The policeman ran into the house and found the paper hanger stuck fast to the floor, with Mr. Nickeldick standing over him.

"What's the trouble?" asked the policeman.

"I don't know," answered Mr. Nickeldick. "I just came in and found this mess of trash here." The policeman pulled off a strip of paper and the pig glared up at him.

"Why, it's the paper hanger," exclaimed Mr. Nickeldick. They carried him up and put him into the bathtub, where it took nearly two hours to soak off the rubbish.

In the meantime the colored cat had come down from the tree and Mr. Nickeldick found her weeping softly in the kitchen.

"It's all mah fault; it's all my fault," she cried. "Ah called in ol' man bad luck when Ah done sing befo' breakfast."

"Nonsense!" said Mr. Nickeldick. "You have had nothing to do with it. The paper hanger told me a bee stung him on the nose and that he fell off the ladder into the paste."

"Tain't no use sayin' it aint," wailed the colored cat. "It's ol' man bad luck. Ah went out fo' to heah de organ and ol' man bad luck sent dat bumble bee and he followed me into de house. No, suh! Ah ain't nevah goin' fo' to sing no moah befo' breakfast."

STREETS OF GOLD

Dick Whittington did not find streets paved with gold, as he thought he was going to. Yet he lived to become Lord Mayor of London.

A lot of others, in first disappointment, would have turned back. Dick didn't. He had hoped to dig a lump of gold out of the street, and live in luxury. When he found it didn't come that easily, he settled down and worked.

Every street is paved with gold—in the long run—for the boy or girl who works and has determination.

The things you do now—your lessons, the jobs around the house—are going to have more bearing than you realize, in a very few years.

If you work with a will now, you are pretty sure of finding your "streets of gold" later on.

"No, it was his grandmother's funeral."

Small brother: "Make it a dollar, and I'll get the whole bunch. I know where she hangs it."

Jack: "My, that's remarkable. In-tuition tell him?"

Bill: "No, the judge."

Tell It to the Marines

The wife and daughter of Lieutenant Berry of one of our naval training stations approaching a gate to the station, were halted by a sentry on duty there who had orders to allow no one to enter by that gate.

"Sorry, but you'll have to go around to the main gate."

"Oh, but we're the Berrys."

"Lady, I don't care if you're the cats' meow, you can't go through this gate."

A Saratoga Chip

The other day I met a Frenchman from Saratoga, who thought he had mastered the English language.

"How do you do," I said, on accosting him.

"Do vot?" he asked.

"I mean how do you find yourself?"

"Saire, I never lose myself."

"You don't understand me: I mean how do you feel?"

"How do I feel? Oh, I feel smooth, you just feel me."

Natural

"That's a flaming tie you have on."

"Sure. I got it at a fire sale."

Setting Her Right

Teacher: "I have went. That's wrong, isn't it?"

Pupil: "Yes, ma'am."

Teacher: "Why is it wrong?"

Pupil: "Because you ain't went yet."

Lollie: "I thought Caesar was dead."

Audrey: "He is, isn't he?"

Lollie: "No, Mrs. Butler said she teaches him!"

Fat man (in a movie to little boy sitting behind him): "Can't you see, little fellow?"

"Little fellow: 'Not a thing.'"

Fat man: "Then keep your eye on me and laugh when I do."

Frogs Get Up In the Air Over Annual Alpine Climbing Event

Aided by Snooky Snake, whose services as a ladder were of great help to them, the Frogtown campers indulged in their annual Alpine climb and rose to heights never before attained. At great risk of life and limb they scaled the sides of Mount Free and enjoyed a wonderful view from the peak.

Fatty Frog, the camper who ruined the Frogtown boat race by greedily trying to get a fly and overturning his boat, again failed at the crucial moment. All the boys had their haversacks well stocked with food, and Fatty, unable to wait until lunch time to eat his, sat down at the very beginning of the climb and consumed seven butterfly-and-beetle sandwiches. From that moment he was a total loss as an Alpine climber, much to the disgust of Old Man Turtle.

GEORGIA SONG.

I.
There is no place like Georgia,
Because the winds have told me so;
And the Atlantic waves have breathed it
Soft and low.

II.
You may talk about the union,
And the land beyond the sea,
But the Empire State of Georgia
Is good enough for me.

III.
Her daughters are the fairest
Of any the sun ever shone,
And her soldiers are the bravest
That ever buckled a sword on.

IV.
When the corn is in the tassel,
And the mellow's on the vine,
They sow sweet music
In the heart of a yellow pine.

The tune is to the song: "Tis the Old Time Religion." I hope that every Georgia cracker can sing it.

My complexion's just a type between;
My years reach nearly thirteen.

Boysish bobs I do adore,
'Cause four inches miss measures
And so more.

My hobbies are not just a few,
For all kinds of outdoor sports I do.

What beauty I have 's not all store-bought,
But lipsticks and powder I've never bought.

And last of all—I like to read a good book.

Especially way off in some shady nook.

SHORT STORY, JR.

The Lady Lottie ploughed along peacefully through the water, across which the setting sun sent its last rays. Old Man Oleson strode down the deck. "Where's Gustaf?" he demanded of the first mate.

"Last I saw of him he was with the cook," replied the mate.

"With the cook!" stormed the captain. "I'm going to get rid of that sneaking fellow first time we land. Every time I get the boy set down to studying navigation he slips off to that cook and his fiddle."

The first mate felt rather sorry for the blustering captain, whose great grief was that none of his three sons cared for the sea. Two older boys had run off and taken jobs ashore.

While the captain stamped along the deck, down below Gustaf was playing the cook's violin. "You play better'n I do already," declared the cook. "Your old man oughta let you take lessons."

"Just as well say he might get me a silk hat," laughed Gustaf. So interested was he in the music that he failed to notice how the ship was beginning to toss.

"Wouldn't think a storm could come up so quick," said the cook. "Listen to her blow!"

Gustaf put down the violin, got his oilskins, and went on deck. He liked storms. He clung close to the cabin, his eyes shining, watching the streaks of lightning, the swirling clouds, the heaving water, and the churning foam. His father, busily shouting orders, glanced at his son approvingly.

The storm finally wore itself out. When the freighter docked next morning all was calm again. Every one was getting ready to go ashore. The cook was combing his hair before a broken piece of mirror in his kitchen. Gustaf wandered in wistfully. He picked up the violin. "Listen," he cried, "I'm playing the storm like it was last night." He swept the bow across the strings, all his heart in the music.

Suddenly he looked up and saw his father in the doorway with one of the owners. Gustaf dropped the bow and flushed.

"You've got to let me take that boy, Oleson, and see that he gets the right sort of training," cried the man enthusiastically. "He's great."

"Father! Let me go!" cried Gustaf. His father's head dropped. Then he raised it suddenly. "All right," he said. "You can go. It isn't as though the sea was losing you, like the other boys. If you can play the storm, like that, to landmen, I'll not stand in your way."

So Old Man Oleson says he didn't lose his boy, after all.

Sleepy Hollow Still Has Old Landmarks

Sleepy Hollow, about which you no doubt remember reading in Washington Irving's story, "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," is the name given the valley of the Pocantico creek. It is located about half a mile north of Tarrytown, in Westchester county, New York. The scenes of which Irving wrote in his story are all actually located there. There is an old Dutch church, built in 1699, and the old mill in the story is also still standing.

Washington Irving is buried in the newer section of the churchyard cemetery, amid the scenes of which he wrote. Above the cemetery rises a knoll on which a fort was built in 1779, but which was never attacked.

Don't imagine that because one of the participants in a quarrel is wrong, that the other is altogether right.

My Pet

This Dog's a Tidy Pet
Morris Reicklos, of Deshler, Nebraska, says that from his experience he has found that dogs make the best pets. His dog has been trained so well that Morris can take him to school with him and he will sit quietly in the seat beside him until the classes are dismissed and he is allowed to go home.

Morris has tacked a piece of oil-cloth on the floor where the dog's dish is kept and when he is given his dinner his pet is careful not to pull the bones off the cloth on to the floor. Morris takes his dog to the baseball diamond with him and lets him help chase the ball. He says it is very easy to train a dog to do tricks.

A Rooster That Answers Questions

"I like dogs and cats," says Joy Patricia Higgins, of Algiers, La., "but I love my pet rooster the best." Joy has raised her pet from the time he was a week old. In the morning he comes to the kitchen door and waits for her to feed him his breakfast out of her hand. When she asks him questions, she says he shakes his head to indicate where he means yes or no. Joy is very proud of her pet, but then, who wouldn't be?

Almost every boy and girl has a pet. We want to hear about yours, and so do the other readers of the My Pet column.

If you have a dog or a cat or some other pet, take a few minutes and write to the "My Pet Editor," in care of this newspaper. Tell about the tricks he does, and anything else of interest to readers. If your letter is a good one, we'll publish an account of your pet in this column.
